'Strange so kind to me formerly I might have how persistently the thought of him has done so; but I was not worthy of further kindness; despair and desolation seemed to have taken possession of me; my own shame of myself kept me away. Last Christmas day I was at my worst, with no money, no food, and worse than for the paper, those who say so speak only the truth. His editorials on international European politics are really remarkable for their insight and grasp of the subject. But—ah! there it is—always, or almost always. How few one reads of, but in sombre black one reads of, but in sombre black-terribly, weirdly sombre. A cold shiver corresponding deficiency somewhere; terribly, weirdly sombre. A cold shiver want of judgement, lack of self-control, am motionless, its features turned away, a afraid poor John Bruce has something of this last.'

'What,' I asked, 'what will dismiss you forever, forever?' In a hollow voice it answered: 'Thine own efforts and those of another.' It then vanished, and I remembered no more

> 'As real a ghost as ever was,' broke in Mr. Evans, rising. 'Well, my boy,' he said kindly, moving towards the door 'I hope you will find that other,' and he quietly left the room.

Some minutes later he returned. Julia rose hastily to meet him, her cheeks aflame (she had been sitting too near the fire perhaps). John also rose. 'Well,' said Mr. Evans with a smile, have you exorcised the ghost of your
