The Stars.

What are their years? The night's unfathom'd Rings back no answer, gives no glimmering And still unknown, and beautiful, they keep The silent courses of Eternity.

What are their memories of Creation's days, When started Chaos from its kingdom hurled?
And clear the tangled problem of its fate?

What have they looked on since, with patient eyes,
While millions years uncounted rolled away?
Who claims antiquity for man that dies, Before such records of the past as they?

Can they, to man his mystery, explain
The way, the whos, of his uncertain state?
Unfold the riddle that he reads in vain,
Or stay the hand of death that waits for fate?

Can they a fashion to the future give,
And tell the whos of man's anxious quest?
Make life a less than wilderness to live,
Or stay the hand of death that waits for fate?

Oh, stars! what midnight message do ye bear To minds grown weary with the years' increase?
The wild eyes that watch you shining there Look out of troubled hearts that know no peace.

Select Tale.

IN THE QUICKSANDS.

The story properly begins at midnight on the San Luis Obispo coast, California, twenty years ago, when the September moonlight shone down upon Stoner's cattle ranch, near the Pacific coast, in the rugged Santa Lucia mountains.

Stoner had been a Texas ranger, and could hold his own extremely well in that rough frontier community. He had carried off a pretty Spanish wife from the Chihuahua region years before, had brought her to the rocky California coast, and had purchased a settler's claim and an adobe house built by a Spanish Hidalgo half a century ago.

Here he farmed, raised cattle on the unused government lands, and kept a office and residence in Building lately occupied by Lorenzo Shaw,
HARTLAND, N. B.

Some horses would have been wiser, but the animal he rode had been bred in the valley.

The approach to the bar was hard for a few rods, and he galloped on. But suddenly, one heart-breaking, breathless descent, noiseless, but unutterably dreadful, Tom Warren's horse went down, down, and the soft, slimy sand came up to his mane. He shrieked out that ghastly cry of appeal and agony which desperate, dying horse will sometimes utter.

Tom knew the peril. He had drawn his feet from the stirrups and lifted them up at the first downward thrust, but the horse began to grab at the sand. He threw himself flat on his breast and tore himself loose from the poor animal, over whose back the mingled sand and water were running, as it rolled from side to side in ineffectual struggles to escape.

Tom sprang over as much of the sand surface as possible, but slowly, resistlessly the mighty force drove him downward. The hard beach was only ten feet distant, but practically the chasm was impassable. He felt his horse sink at right angles, and gripped his own knees and arms, his thighs and shoulders.

Two inches more and the end by suffocation was inevitable. Up to this time he had not shouted; only his horse's wild death scream had told the tragedy.

What was the use? Who would be passing along that lonely road? Then he thought of Tessa and of life. He raised his voice in a clear, strong shout for help, again and again repeated.

Anonymous papers, unaccounted for by the trend of public opinion in this country, are assuming that the openly expressed desire for freer trade relations indicates a hidden hankering after political union. As well might they assume that the man who asks
