If the amendment had been part of the original bill he would have opposed it. He read from the (ficial debates of 1887 to show how strongly he was then in favor of immediate abolition. He had never changed his opinion since then, but would accept the amendment rather than give any one a chance to say that he was opposed to abolition, even though it is not to come for two or three years yet. Mr. Porter was disappointed that the council had not egreed to the bill for imme diate abolition. It was unfortunate that at of the purchaser.
