It is a simple, undeniable fact that our assimilated and natural laws of commerce and trade is with our neighbors' market at our doors. Why then would England discriminate against us for making the best treaty possible for our interests. The most factious must recognize that their consuming wants are more than our producing capsulity. Our affinity and relationship with them and Americanized ideas meet their tastee and wants. Miss Daisy Beverley, the elocutionist and dramatic reader, a granddaughter of Mrs. Frances Beverley, of this city, and who it will be remembered by our citizens gave some inneighbors, and believes they will succeed A reliable Washington correspondent says, in writing to the Boston Journal, it is stated here that the Dominion Government officials claim that Secretary Blaine has fixed Oot. 14 as the day for the renewal of the reciprocity negotiations in Washington. Whether or not the statement is to be accepted without qualification will depend upon the understanding as to what the term negotiation means; if the Dominion officials mean that the Secretary of State has given to Sir Charles Tupper and his representatives any assurances that a reciprocity treaty can be negotiated upon the basis proposed by Sir Charles Tupper, the statement is croneous. Charles Tupper, the statement is croneous. The Secretary of State has not given the Canadian officials an assurance that a reciprocity treaty will be negotiated on any basis. It can, however, with the greatest weight of authority be said, that unless the Dominion have something different to offer from their proposition offered, it may as well be stated now as then, it will result in failure. President Harrison is not an advocate of any sort of reciprocity with Canada, except a free interchange of manufactured products and raw materials alike. Secretary Blaine sees no chance to make a treaty with the Macdonald Government. Our national thoroughfare of trade is Boston and the New England cities. We may boast of our line of steam
