How blest the righteous when he dies!

How gently heaves the expiring breast

So sinks the gale when storms are o'er;

A calm which life nor death destroys;

And naught disturbs that peace profound

Farewell, conflicting hopes and fears, Where lights and shades alternate dwell!

How bright th' unchanging morn appears! Farewell, inconstant world, farewell!

When sinks a weary soul to rest!

How mildly beam the closing eyes!

So fades a Summer cloud away;

so gently shuts the eye of day;

A holy quiet reigns around,-

So dies a wave along the shore.

Which his unfetter'd soul enjoys.

Life's labor done, as sinks the clay,-Light from its load the spirit flies,

While heaven and earth combine to say

How blest the righteous when he dies!

These are anxious days for Mr. Gladstone, and yet the Grand Old Man knows better than to let politics rob him of the peace of mind that is essential to a serene old age. During the recent troubles over the leadership of Parnell in the Irish parliamentary party, a friend called on Mr. Gladstone, expecting to find him eating his heart out over the political orieis. Instead of which, not a word was said about politics by Mr. Gladstone. He was deep in the pages of Scott's "Bride of Lammermoor."
