SAMUEL & JAMES WATTS,

Poetry.

Never Trouble Trouble.

My good man is a clever man, Which no one will gainsay;

He lies awake to plot and plan

'Gainst lions in the way; While I, without a thought of ill.

Sleep sound enough for three; For I never trouble trouble till Trouble troubles me.

And when the sky is clear at six

He knows it won't remain.

He is always prophesying ill,
To which I won't agree,
For I never trouble trouble till
Trouble troubles me.

The wheat will never show stop— But soon how green the field! We will not harvest half a crop—

Yet have a famous yield!

But I will wait and see,

For I never trouble trouble till

Misfortune's coming sure!

But cannot make me see,

For I never trouble trouble till

For I never trouble trouble till

Trouble troubles me.

Trouble troubles me.

We have good share of worldly gear, And fortune seems secure, Yet my good man is full of fear—

He has a sort of second sight,
And when the fit is strong,
He sees beyond the good and right,
The evil and the wrong,
Heaven's cup of joy he'll surely spill
Unless I with him be,

Canon Wilberforce on Temperance.

In an address in London, Canon Wilberforce said : "The publican is defying all our educational and religious efforts in every direction, and is the greatest modern enemy of the kingdom of Heaven. He knows how to break all the ten commandments at once, and everyone who fights against his trade fights on behalf of the people. If intemper-ance is a great evil, then to produce intemperance is a crime. The nation must be made to know this, and the power of the temperance movement is impatiently teaching public opinion."
