Unfinished Music. sat alone at the organ. At the close of a troubled day, When the sunset's crimson embers On the western altar lay. was weary with vain endeavor, My heart was ill at ease, And I sought to soothe my sadness With the voice of the sweet-toned keys.

My hands were weak and trembling, My fingers all unskilled To render the grand old anthem With which my soul was filled Through the long day's cares and worries, I had dreamed of that glorious strain. And I longed to hear the organ Repeat it to me again.

It fell from my untaught fingers Discordant and incomplete, I knew not how to express it.
Or to make the discord sweet; So I toiled with patient labor Till the last bright gleams were gone, And the evening's purple shadows

Were gathering one by one. Then a master stood beside me, And touched the noisy keys, And lo! the discord vanished And melted in perfect peace. I heard the great organ pealing My tune that I could not play, The strains of the glorious anthem

That had filled my soul all day

Down through the Dim cathedral I'ne tide of music swept,
And through the shadowy arches
The lingering cohoes crept;
And I stood in the purple twilight And heard my tune again, Not my feeble untaught rendering. But the master's perfect strain.

So I think, perchance, the Master, At the close of life's weary day, Will take from our trembling fingers The tune that we cannot play;
He will hear through the jarring discord
The strain, although half expressed;
He will blend it in perfect music, And add to it all the rest. -Minnie E. Kinney.

her tired head there, felt that she was more than repaid for all the work, and worry, and unrest of the past week-all the weariness and misery of it-now that he was so nearly well again.

It was a very narrow escape this of Max Valens—a long hard struggle for life it had been; but with Elinor to help and pray for him, he had conquered. Fortunate it was for him that he had fallen in such good hands for, although Paul Marcelon's household and house-Bohemain style, he was bonestly fond of his friend, and when he saw the ill ness coming on, had taken him in and given him the best of everything even to the best chamber, and his sister for nurse. You didn't know it? You are the oddest people, you and Paul, that I ever saw. I haven't been here two weeks yet and I know more about all your friends than you do. However, it's so;' and the white elbows were placed on the shabby bureau, the dimpled chin resting on the pink palms and the owner of the perfect face gazed at it long and earnest-

Those next days were very dreary ones to Elinor. Her royal heart refused to believe at first that Max could be untrue to her even in thought; but daily Alice's fascinations were exerted until at last even Paul noticed it and spoke of it in his rough way.

'The girl shall go,' he said, 'she shall not ruin your life in this way, Nellie.

Max does not really care for her, but she monopolizes him: and if it comes to that, he is yours in honor bound.

But Elinor pleaded with him. 'I care for him.' she said, 'more than or the world—so much that my hanfor the world-so much, that my happiness is nothing if he be not content. Would you have your sister marry a man who cares for another woman, Paul?

A College Education.

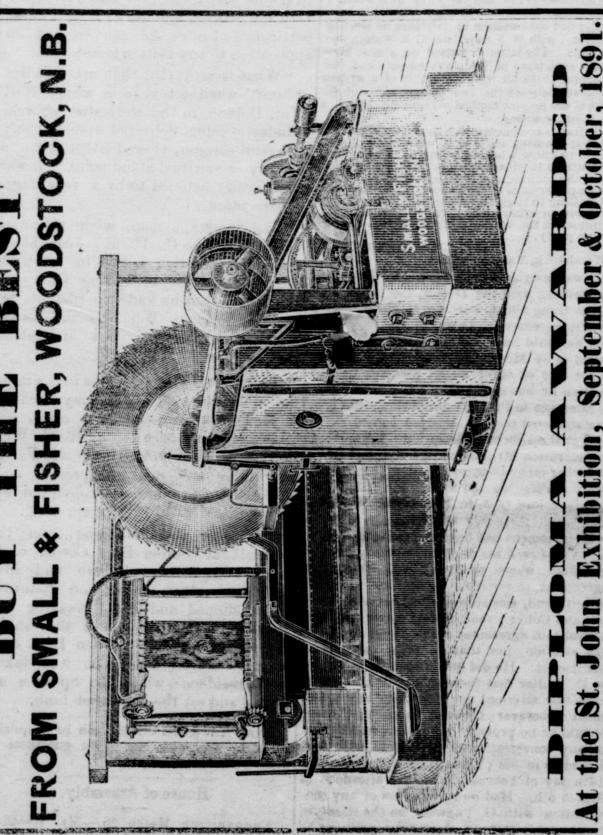

A boy is not educated when he l college any more than a jockey has a race after a morning's practice. will hardly be said however, that of two jockies one who is familiar with the stable, understands manipulation of the harness, and has had experimental opportunity of speeding his nag, will not have a better chance, the horses being equal, of winning a race than one who is unequipped and uninformed as to the track and animal. It seems to me this whole discussion turns upon the one uestion: 'What kind of success is neant?' says a New York Recorder writer. 'I believe that boy, who, after a few years of common school training, is put, at the age of 12 or 13, into a stor or an office is better started in life the making of money in mercantile channels than one, who, at the age of 23, being graduated from College, goes into the same line of endeavor. That's common sense, for he finds himself a young man, uninformed as to the details of the several grades through which his companion has struggled and worked for a dozen years while he was studying, and it seems to me, also, that the question as to whether the young man from college wouldn't be able in a very short time to master all the details that his hard-working companion has learned by dint of experience must be answered in the negative. There's nothing like ex-been assumed, as the rule for manufacturer of all descriptions, that they are to produce articles adapted to the wants of those who Here, in the State of Maine, it any point in cheese-making is thoroughly settled, it is that the prime shipping cheese of Western production is not wanted by the retail trade.

In other words, make an article which the customers of these factories do not call for.

With similar conditions existing in the Rev. Dr. Jenckes, of Indianapolis, has seventy proofs that the world will end in ten years, and he gets sixty nine of them from of the unpopular commodity? The fishermen of San Diego have utilated diedricity in their war upon the fish. Incandescent electric lights are lowered into the water at night, and a large net is lowered below them. The fish are attracted by the light and are plainly visible. When sufficiently numerous the nets are hauled up The catches are enormous.

Another question arises here in this matter of expert practice. Am I justified in allowing a college professor, or any other professor, to come to my vats and manipulate the milk at his will when his experience is not based upon a commercial practice? That is, if he has not earned his broad and butter by choose making, is he competent for more than a discussion of principle and theory, which actual workers may accept or reject on

A claim may be made for a change of me thod that it is well to make for export, but

FRANCIS BARNES.

My Visit to Mrs. Long. "I think 'twas just but yesterday A friend of mine scross the way-A Mrs. Solomon Caleb Long, Sent me an invitation strong To visit her that very night, As she would DIE by candie light. This news to me was strapge and sad; I hoped that things were not so bad. As she had made them out to be In that strange note she sent to me. The night came on-I hurried out To visit with a face devout My friend, who was to DIE that night Under a candle's flick'ring light.
I gently rapped; my beating heart
Did almost from its place depart; When suddenly, with swiles of hope Dear Mrs. Long the door and ope: I stood and gezed with wond'ring eyes, She said, come in and see my dyes. Of course, I quickly saw the joke.
And not a word 'bout DYING spoke; But saw that by mistake an '1' She'd used, instead of letter 'Y.' I grasped her hand with much delight-She took me to her kitchen bright, And with great confidence declared That all her dyes were now prepared The fun began: a Cashmere dress That had its day of usefulness. But now was faded, dingy, streak'd, As if the sun and rain 'and wreak'd A vengeance terrible and strong On this worn dress of Mrs. Long Now, one good bath in Diamond Black A new life to this dress brought back To Reven Black a Gray was brought-A metamorphose deftly wrought:
By Diamond Black for Silk prepared.
Her old Drab Silk a new life shared. She finished up with Cotton hose, Which once were colored blue and rose; And in the twinkling of an eye, She had them deep immerced in dye: She called this dye Fast Stocking Black, And said, the ladies were not slack But quickly found, if they were wire, Twas cafe to use the Diamond Dyes. With happy thoughts I then was fill'it. My heart with feelings grand was thrill'd. A sweet, 'good night,' then home I bied.

Well preased that Mre. Long had DYED,"
