When life pours forth its fullest song-The proud and passionate thirties. Life's summer glows; with flower and fruit The long day all too short is, And well its glorious splendors suit Our mid-day world, the forties.

Is this the first approach of night? Yes; downward now our drift is, As on we fare through waning light, Slow sinking through the fifties.

Still closer folds our marrowing range: Our fate more sure and fixed is— For good or ill, small chance of change When once we reach the sixties. Darkens the shadow of the tomb,

And either hell or heaven 'tis, As life, past, present, and to come, Looks on us through the seventies. Shut out from manhood's earlier force, How sad the growing weight is

We bear along the dreary course That lingers through the eighties! Still slowlier dips our weary oar But useless to repine 'tie; And yet we long to find a shore Somewhere among the mineties

Come, kindly death, un feared, long sought,
Spare us the torturing one dread
That Heaven has dropped us out of thought
To leave us o'er the hundred! -J. Arthur Binns.

Several articles of national and patriot interat give timeliness and special value to the July number of Harper's Magazine. The opening paper, by Charles D. Deshler, relates "How the Dec'aration was Received in the old Thirteen," being a history, from public doou-ments and other contemporary sources of the manner in which the Declaration of Independonce was published in the colonies and how Loomis Ne'son's exposition of the causes whi one of the most powerful a'teratives, is agreeable to most palates, the flavor being by no means medicinal.

People who like frequent changes in government may find variety in Mexico. During the past sixty-two years that country has had fifty four presidents, one regence and commit Ne sport exposition of the cauces which have promoted "The Growth of the Federal Power" in this country, and which have gradually strengthened the authority of the central government while diminishing that of the States.
