Poetry.

"Just Common Folk." A hundred humble songeters thrill The notes that to their lays belong, Where just one nightingale might fill The place with its transcendent song And thus fame comes and with its smile
A soul with lasting greatness cloaks,
And leaves a thousand else the while
To be for aye just common folks.

If only sweetest bells were rung How we should miss the minor chimes If only grandest poets sung
There'd be no humble little rhymes. The modest, clinging vines add grace Unto the forest's giant oaks,
And mid earth's mighty is a place
To people just with common folks.

Not they the warriors who shall win Upon the battlefield a name To sound above the awful din. Not theirs the painter's deathless fame,
Not their's the poet's muse that brings
The rythmic gift his soul invokes;
Theirs but to do the simple things That duty gives just common folks. They are the multitudes ot earth And mingle ever in the crowd Elbowing those of equal birth,

Where none, because of caste, is proud Bound by the meshes of a fate Above the lowly, 'neath the great, Are millions of just common folks Fate has not lifted them above
The level of the human plain;
They share with men a brother love,
In touch with pleasure and with pain,
One great, far reaching brotherhood
With common burdens, common yokes
And common wrongs and common good,
God's army of just common folks.

Selegt Tale.

RELATIONS BY MARRIAGE.

Everybody went to Pamela Pepper' wedding. It was quite natural that they should. Mis Pepper was as well-known in Cornstock Corners as the old town clock itself on the steeple of the Methodist meeting-house. She had made dresses and trimmed bonnets there for more years than she cared to remember She was gossip-in-general, prime mover in all tha tea-parties, quilting bees, and apple-butter frolics, head of the charitable and religious societies and chief chronicler of all the dates in regard to births, deaths, and marriages. She knew what everybody said to everybody else, what Mrs. Meluth gave for her new sealskin cloak and in how many weeks Mr. Luckless's farm would be foreclosed on. She was quite au fait as to every household quarrel, all the family skele tons and a score of motives for each action, which no one else would have dreamed of. No story was quite complete unless Miss Pamela Pepper' version of it had been heard. And it people didn't know their own speeches after they had been through the medlumship of Miss Pamela's interpretation, surely that was no fault of hers. But the blossoming-time comes, we are told, even to aloes a hundred years old—and Miss Pamela Pepper was mar-ried just before she floated into the forties. How it had come to pass, nobody knew exactly. There were some who had the hardihood to assert that Mr. Josiah Black had come to the dressmaking establishment to see Mary More, the blue-eyed little apprentice who made the button-holes and sewed the straight seams, but that being skilfully intercepted by Miss Pamela, she had taken his overtures as intended for herself and accepted him effusively, before he had proposed; and that Josiah, being a meek young man with white eye lashes and a flat, freckled face, had not PHYSICIAN AND SURGEON, the requisite courage to escape from the

> Be that as it might, it was certain that Mary More had been discharged and that Mr ice nitches as the held it up: that Miss Pepper was now Mrs. Josiah Black. There had been an outfit rdered, economically from New York, a wedding-cake nearly as big as a wheel, and a deal of ostentation. The bride declared that it was love at first

'It ain't a month,' she remarked gushingly, 'since me and Josiah first set eyes store to ask the way to Squire Robinson's. He looked at me-oh, how he looked at me! And I felt a sort of alloverishness that I couldn't describe noway in the world! He didn't think of them things; he only felt as we was made for each other by Providence!' In which case, Squire Robinson remarked, sub rosa, Providence had made a big mistake of it for once. For Mrs. and the frame of a Prussian grenadier, while Mr. Josiah Black was slight and son said there was fifteen years' differ-

Mr. Black was silent and moody as they walked up the steep hill leading to the village-street. Mrs. Black was secretly resolving that, husband or no husband, she would not be captured by the Goth and Visgoth, that horde of 'I must assert myself,' she thought, 'at the very first, or I shall be overrun!'

A long, low red building faced them, at the top of a hill, with a fence drapped with morning-glory vines, trailing hops and wild vetches, and two or three gnarled quince-trees leaning up against the south end. 'There's lights inside,' said the late Miss Pamela. 'And a fire! There's somebody there!' 'My folks,' briefly remarked Josiah.

'Your folks,' repeated Pamels; and there was a world of unsyllabled meaning in her voice. Walking valiantly forward, she flung open the door, and stood facing the little group which was fire. And Josiah Black, following pushed her, in rather an undignifie manner, into their midst, with the introductory speech:
'My wife! Here she is!'

'How d've do, Mrs Josiah?' said an elderly woman. 'I'm your' husband's

'And I'm his sister,' said a blond matron with lilac ribbons in her cap. 'And I'm his other sister,' spoke up a short, sharp little female with a blackand-tan-terrier sort of face and a rustling black silk dress.

'Brother Simeon,' announced Josiah as a stout man with a profusely poma tumed head rose and ducked it toward her. 'And Uncle 'Lijah and Aun' Nancy,' motioning toward a solid-look ing couple in the background; and my cousins. 'Don't be in a hurry,' faintly uttered Josiah; but none of the relations took upon their hats, bonnets, shawls and other articles of outer wrapping with precipitate haste. 'Of course,' added Mrs. Josiah, a lit-
