To behold the morning light In the auroral heavens Stream, stream, stream:

Lifting the winged night From valley and from height, Taking a speedy flight, Like a dream, like a dream, That is past, and could not last in the gleam Of the day's irradiating beam So night doth pass away, And the omnipresent day, In the universal sphere

Glorifies, glorifies; Then why should we delay Morning orisons to pay, To worship and to pray And be wise, and be wise, At a shrine so divine in the skies, Where the glorious orb of the day doth arise O wondrous orbed light! So glorious, and so bright, Transcendent in the heavens,

We behold, we behold; With glad hearts and pure delight, Transcendent in its might. As of old, as of old, In this hour of thy power, onward rolled, Triumphant moves thy chariot of gold.

Mr. Florence's Advice. Florence, the actor, once gave some ad vice to a friend in these words: "My DEAR--: One gallon of whiskey costs about three dollare, and contains about sixty-five fifteen cent drinks. Now, if you must drink, buy a gallon and make your wife the barkeeper. When you are dry give her fifteen cents for a drink, and when the whiskey is gone she will have, after paying for it, $6 75 left, and every gallon thereafter will yield the same profit. This money she should put away, so that when you have become an inebriate, unable to support yourself and shunned by every respectable man, your wife may have money enough to keep you until your time comes to fill a drunkard's grave."-N. The pange and torments of indigestion,
Or something take, and, in its taking, and them.
Shakespeare didn't say that, but very likely he would have said something similar, if he were living in this 19th century, when so many suffer untold agonies from indigestion. Of course he would have game on to say that a man must be a fool not to take the "something" which would put an end to the "pange and torments" spoken of, if he could get it. Now it is a fact that weakened, impoverished blood brings on indi-
