Poetry.

(For the Carleton Sentinel )

A poor beggar man one cold winter's day
Was passing along a crowded highway;
His scant, tattered rags a sight to behold,
His shoes without soles, his hat worn and old.

No che to pity him, no one to cheer

His poor lonely life of wayfaring here;

He staggered and fell just under a sign,

That bore on its front words easy defined;

What signify those words, "Money to Lend"?

Look upward and read; thea, stooping, deplore: Should poor men die before charity's door?

There's money to loan to those who have need:

Then the lowly poor, to whom may they turn,

When pressed with care, sick, unable to earn What difficult labors little afford?

Where the Money Goes. Every rag stuck in the window to keep out the cold from a drunkard's home denotes contribution towards buying new suits for the publican and his family. The more elegance and ease in the publican's family, the more poverty, degradation and despair in the fa-milies of those who patronize him. The orner grog-shop, with its blazing windows and marble floors, is paid for by the tenants of other landlords, who do not pay their rents. The more plate glass and marble slabs there are in the saloon, the more old bats and worn out garments must be stuck in the windows of their patrons to keep out the cold air. The more silk flounces upon the dress of a saloon keeper's wife, the cheaper the calico upon the wife and children of his patrons. The more spacious the parlor and brighter the fire of the publican, the more scantily furnished, cheerless and cold are the abodes of those who patronize him.
