A PRIZE PORTRAIT

FARMERS' CONVENTION AT GLASSVILLE. (Concluded)

The afternoon session was opened by Dr Welch of Glassville, with a very able paper on "chemistry as applied to Agriculture." It would be utterly impossible in a mere synopsis to do anything like justice to this learned and elaborate production. There is the less need of this, as a full report of it will appear elsewhere. Suffice it to say that it was a paper in the spirit of the nineteenth Attorney-at-Law, and displayed not only great soien tific knowledge, but also a thorough appreciation of science to puration of the application of science to purations of the application of science to puration of the application of th through a stolid attachment to old established ruts, and often through downright stupidity. He rehearsed in graphic style the rapid advances science had made within the last through a stolid attachment to old establishadvances science had made within the last quarter of a century, and its triumphs over prejudices as old as the hills. He pointed out the immense advantages that had resulted to mankind by its recent alliances with many of the arts, and especially with agriculture, emphasizing its functions in the analysis of soils, manures, plant food, and animal food. He showed that many processes of analysis were not so difficult and laborious as people often imagined, but were within the reach of almost all farmers. He contrasted the metals and about ashes as an orchard manure, of almost all farmers. He contrasted the me- been said about ashes as an orchard manure, thods of the ignorant with those of the scien-tific agriculturist, in a masterly and some-times humorous review of both, placing both before his audience in such terse style and before his audience in such terse style and lucid light, as to leave no doubt whatever in the minds of his hearers, as to the superiority although of a high intellectual order, was written in language intelligible to all, (not always the case with such productions), and roborated what Mr. Baxter had hinted at about dishonest fruit tree agents. They would all remember an agent who was here the other year, selling Russian Mulberry trees, with a great flourish of trumpets. Well these same trees were not worth twenty five cents, the hundred. He enlarged upon the best method of planting and training apple trees-not too deep, nor too close-about thirty feet apart each way—because the roots extended as far as the branches. There should actually be from eight to ten barrels of fruit on a really first class apple tree. Grass should not be allowed to grow around the tree for discoveries, inventions and innovations, did not want the softer kinds of fruits, but

Mr. Home reviewed the paper at length—paid a high tribute to Dr. Welch's ecientific and literary attainments—and congratulated the convention on the great privilege they had just enjoyed in listening to his learned friend, a gentleman, in every respect so eminently qualified to enlighten and delight. dressed convention on the expediency of forming a Farmers' and Dairymen's Association in the district, enlarging eloquently on the great advantages of such organizations to the individual, the community and the country at large. He was ably supported by Mr. Home, who likewise urged upon gentlemen present the necessity of immediately taking action in such an important matter. The subject was then allowed to stand over for the time being as Mr. Robertson was now again ready to take the platform, and open another Babcockian fusilade.

He began by testing the milk samples fur nished as above, and found that Squire Mo commencement of the session, adding a little Laughlan's milk contained 4 00, 4 00 and 4 60 cold water, about 50; showing ladies and per cent. of butter fat; Mr. Bridge's 5 00; gentlemen the granulated butter, salting it and Mr. B rewster's 4 20 and 4 80 per cent. gentlemen the granulated butter, salting it in the churn and explaining the process and its advantages in his usual pointed and lucid style. The churn was a Daisy, so was the churner.

Mr. Robertson resumed the debate on the Cheese Factory and Creamery questions, with a second exhibition of the Babcock Milk Testing Machine, for the benefit of any who might not have been present, during previous session and explaining its importance and working. He examined and tested and Mr. B rewster's 4 20 and 4 80 per cent. He repeated a description of the process in which the numerous ladies present seemed to take great interest. He then, after a few remarks on calculating the epocific gravity of milk, which he illustrated on the black board, returned to the subject of feeding cows, and gave the following daily ration formulae, with which prize cows had been treated:—
