Poetry.

That is So.

It is said that Truth is gold—

That is so!

That it yields a hundred fold,

That its champions will prize the prize

Which endures and never dies—

That is so!

It is said that this bridge pain—

That is so!

That its work is lost, not gain;

That it kills the soul and brings

Never calm but many things—

That is so!

It is said that Godness thrives—

That is so!

That it blossoms human lives;

That at last, when earth has flown,

It shall gain a stony crown—

That is so!

Life is transient at the best—

That is so!

But, with Godness for our guest,

Truth shall endure and never die—

That is so!

Select Tale.

REVENGED.

It was about half an hour after sunset, and an orange light still burned above the lonely southern valley. The trembling evening star was hanging over the green silences of the fragrant Tennessee woods. Vapor wreathed phantoms from the river across and from the dense thickets that skirted the camp ground came over and upon the mournful whisper of the wind, sounding faint and low, like the remembered echoes of a dream. Yet Wallace Keene would have given well nigh all he was worth to exchange the luxuriant verdure, one moment only, for the pine clad heights and salt winds of Maine, with russet winged birds chirping their familiar madrigals in the apple orchards below.

"Two years ago I left home," murmured Wallace Keene as he gazed thoughtfully out where the purple sky seemed to touch the waving woods. "Two years since young Harney told me he never would give Marion to a common mechanic," yet the wound rankles sharply still.

"Is that you, Spicer? What now?"

Is that you, Spicer? What now?

Is that you, Spicer? What now?

When they were alone together in the tent, Wallace Keene came to the low bedside.

"So you're all right, Mr. Harney?" he asked kindly.

"Captain Keene," murmured Harney, shrinking from the soothing tone as if it had been a dagger's point, "I have no right to expect this treatment at your hands."

"Oh, never mind," said the young man lightly. "What can I do to make you more comfortable?"

Harney was silent, but his eyes were full of the tears he vainly would drive back —tears of remorseful shame—and he turned his flushed face away lest the man he had once so grossly insulted should see them fall.

The next day he again alluded to the home subject.

"Captain Keene," you asked me yesterday what you could do for me?

"Yes."

"I want you to obtain leave for May to come and nurse me when I am transferred to the hospital."

Captain Keene turned toward the sick man a face white and bare as marble and said in a strangely altered voice:

"Do you mean your sister?"

"My sister—yes."

"Of course, if you wish it, I can obtain permission, Harney. But—"

"Well?"

Keene's cheek colored, and he bit his lip.

"I should not suppose she would be willing to leave her husband for the very uncertain comfort of hospital life."

Harney smiled, looking into his companion's face with keen searching eyes.

"May I not married, Captain Keene?

She has no such appendage as a husband!"

"Not married?"

"I know what you thought. She was engaged and almost married. We had nearly induced her to become Lisle Spencer's wife, but she refused on the very day of the wedding day."

Keene had risen and was pacing up and down the narrow limits of the tent with feverish haste.

"Because," went on Harney, "she loved a certain young volunteer who left S—about two years ago too well ever to become any other man's wife."

"Harney, you do not mean to say—"

"I do, though, old fellow, and what is more; I mean to say that since I've been lying in this tent my eyes have been pretty thoroughly opened to my own absurd folly and impertinence."

Captain Keene wrung his companion's handkerchief hurried away, to mistake the book for the instant and to commit several other no less inexcusable aburdes.

"I see you'll get nothing written today," sighed Harney.

Wallace Keene took up sheet after sheet of condemned note paper.

"I shall, though," smiled Wallace.

"Only I can't tell exactly which end of my letter to begin at."

Captain Keene did not write, but he wrote and if he inserted a little foreign matter into the epistle it didn't matter, for Harney, considerate fellow, never asked to see it.

Marion came, and when her brother was promoted into the convalescent ward, and the west home again, it was only to lose herself in bosoms of orange blossoms, forests of white satin robe and acres of pearly shimmering silk, shaded with frosty gleams of silver brocade, for the course of true love, after all, is not a straight line. With lower heads, he shortly observed an iron door that creaking hung on a hinge ajar, but the entrance was closed by a
