MR. MORTIMORE'S MISTAKE.

Let me see-where was it that I first met her? Oh, yes; it was under the ancient arches of the old bridge, boating by moonlight, the sound of a flute played oftly afar off, and all of a sudden the keel of my boat coming sharply in contact with somebody else's oars.
'Hallo, you!' cried out a clear incisive young voice. 'Where are you going to? Why don't you look which way you are steering?'

'Charley Dresden!' cried out I, little needing the torrents of obloquy he was 'Old Mortimore! he responded, joyously. 'Why, who on earth would have thought of finding you dreaming on the Thomes? Here! Come into my boat. Hitch on your old craft behind! And let so dreadful!' me introduce you to Miss Sophy Adri-

I looked as sharply at Miss Sophy as the moonlight and my own modesty would let me, for I kwew that she was the especial admiration of my friend Charley Dresden. I had heard her blue eyes and peach-blossom cheeks raved about until even my much-enduring pa-

She was pretty, slight, round and rosy, with China-blue eyes, a dimple in either cheek, and golden-brown hair worn in long loose curls, with none of the fashionable abominations of crimes, frizzes and artificial braids about her.

Hardened old bachelor though I was I felt as if I could have fallen in love with her on the spot, if I haden't known so well that Charley had the first inning. We rode home together, or, at least as far on our way home as the Thames would take us. Sophy sang little boat ballads. Charley roared out tenor barcarrolles. I even essayed a German student song which I had learned at Heidelburg, nobody knows how long ago, and

That was enough. I went home and enclosed Bullion's letter in another envelope, directing it to poor Charley Dresden's address, Paris, adding a few lines of my own, wherein I endeavored to mingle consolation and philosophy as aptly as possible.

'lt's an ungracious thing for me to do, sending this letter,' wrote I, 'but 1 believe it to be the part of a true friend to undeceive you as promptly as possible. Bullion is a millionaire. Sophy is possibly but a fallible mortal, after all. Be a man, Dresden, and remember that she is not the only woman in the world who would rather be an old man's darling than a young man's slave.' And then I wrote, curtly declining to "stand up" with old Bullion.

* 18000 4 * 14178 94* 190 40* It was but a few days subsequently that the waiter showed an elegantly dressed young woman into my room at the hotel where I was stopping. I rose in some surprise. Aside from old Aunt Platt and my laundress my lady visitors were few. But the instant she threw up her thick tissue veil I recognized the soft blue eyes and damask-rose cheeks of Sophy Adriance.

'Oh, Mr. Mortimore!' she cried piteously, 'I know you wont mind my coming to your hotel, because you seem exactly like a father to me.' I winced a little at this. 'But I have received such a letter from Charley, and as-as you've known him for a long time, I thought perhaps you could explain it to me. Oh, have been so wretched! And indeed, indeed I didn't deserve it!'

She gave me a tear-blotted letter, and then sat down to cry quietly in the corner of the sofa until such time as I should bay finished its perusal. It was a fit mirror of Charley Dresden's impetuous nature, full of bitter reproaches, dark innuendoes, hurling back her troth and hinting gloomily at suicide

When I read it I scarcely wondered at poor Sophy's distress. 'What does he mean, Mr. Mortimore. asked Sophy, plaintively, 'when he accuses me of deceiving him. of selling myself to the highest bidder? Oh, it's in sending the banker's correspondence to Charley Dresden. 'And now,' said I, 'do you wonder that he is indignant?'

Sophy's face grew radiant. 'But there's no harm done,' said she. 'No real harm, I mean. Because I've written him a long letter about mamma and Mr. Bullion, which he must have received the next mail after he sent off this cruel, cruel sheet of reproaches And pray, Mr. Mortimore, don't look so woe-A week afterwards Dresden and I met begone,' she said kindly.
