Doctors sometimes allege that patients are quite too willing to throw the clame of their tendants. If that is true it supplies one of the best reasons why doctors should never afford them that excuse, but should totally refuse to prescribe any kind of alcoholic liquors. Others stoutly deny all responsibility to the curing of disease. The oft-quoted French doctor went but one step further when he boasted of curing a troublesome ekin disease beautifully—but the patient was dead. Too often it would be better for the patient to die without the wine than to die at last a drunkard.
