Selected Tale.

TOO DEVOTED.

Mr. Cameron's Experiment Was a Complete Success.

"Yes," said Mrs. Cameron, "I like him well enough, I suppose."

Mrs. Cameron was just nineteen, a bride of six months, and a lovely hazel-eyed brunette. She had everything that heart could desire, and consequently, wasn't exactly pleased with anything.

Mrs. Cameron liked pink, and Mr.
Cameron had furnished her boudoir in rose color and silver.

She was partial to flowers, and her husband had given her a bouquet of flowers to keep her wants supplied.

She was fond of birds, and three or four gilded cages swung from the ceiling, each one thrilling with delicious melody.
In fact, Mrs. Cameron had everything she wanted, and, as previously intimated, was far from satisfied.

"Like him well enough," repeated Anna Clarke, who, having just graduated from school, thought that the young wife, who had wedded the man she loved, ought to be extremely happy. "Oh, Mina, how could you speak!"

"Well, I can't help it," said Mrs. Cameron, letting her head fall languidly back on the rose-stained cushions of the low easy chair on which she sat. "One gets tired of cake and champagne all the time.
Sometimes I think I should be happier if Clarence didn't worship me quite so devotedly."

"Oh, Mina!"

"It's a bore, you know," said the young wife, confidentially. "I would be a relief if he would say 'I don't love you,' that's good! Now, Sophia Markan is actually afraid of her husband—a great, handsome six-footer of a fellow, with a lovely black silk beard like an Italian brigand. Oh, it must be charming to be a little afraid of one's husband!"

"Mr. Armina," cried the astounded Miss Clarke, "what nonsense you are talking!"

"I dare say it may seem so to you, child," said Mrs. Cameron, patronizingly.
"But if you ever get married—"

"Oh, course I shall, said pretty Anna, who had not the slightest idea of being an old maid.

"Well, when you are about to get married, don't marry a man that is 'eager and spiteful and all that's nice.' It's much too good!"

"You'll recommend, on the contrary, 'eager and spiteful and puppy dogs tails,' eh?" laughed Anna, also quoting the nursery rhyme.

"Not exactly that; but one does get tired of perpetual honey and sunshine, said unreasonably Armina, as she reached out her hand for her embroidery.
"And now you know you promised to tell me about that Albricht's trousseau."

As it happened, Mrs. Cameron's elusive trousseau was separated from her boudoir by parties.

Mr. Cameron, reading his paper, sat on the other side of the draperies, and heard this conversation—an eavesdrop-per in spite of himself. His cheeks burned, his lips quivered, and the blood rushed in little tingling, needlelike particles through his whole frame.

So, Mina was getting tired of him.
Well, after all, it was better to thoroughly comprehend the whole state of the case. He was too amiable, was he?
Mr. Cameron rose, flung aside the crumpled newspaper, and walked once or twice the length of the room.

"I'll see that the fault is corrected," he said to himself with a grim smile.
And he went off to business without the usual good-bye kiss in which he generally indulged.

Mrs. Cameron went out shopping in the afternoon, and was detained a little, but it did not worry her in the least.
"Clarence was too amiable," she said, and she spent an extra half-hour in deciding whether she would have two or four gray for her new kid gloves, and whether she looked better in a hat trimmed with sweat-berry or simple daisy.

"I'm a little late," she said, as she entered the dining-room, where Mr. C. was pacing up and down like the proverbial "caged lion" of romance.

"Late, madam! I should say you were!" retorted her husband in the least friendly manner. Mrs. Cameron started. "Half past six, if it's a second! But I suppose you think my time is of no value!"

"Clarence!"

"I've been this long enough, went on the indignant husband, and I give you fair notice that I shall hear it no longer. 'Jane!' he said to the hired girl, 'bring in the dinner at once, and to-morrow let it be served at six, punctually, whether your mistress is here or not!'"

"Yes, sir," said Jane, and she disappeared, grinning into the kitchen.

Mrs. Cameron sat down, crimson to the very roots of her hair.

"Clarence," she said, with difficulty controlling her voice, "it is necessary that I should see you before the servants."

"Yes, madam, it is. If a wife doesn't comprehend her duty, it is high time she should be made to do so. I'll trouble you for a cup of coffee."

Mrs. Cameron was muffled, stunned, dazed. She was entirely unused to this style of domestic reproof. Almost before the dessert—with which Mr. C. found pleasure in flirting, intimating that it would be better if his wife remained home to attend to household matters a little more —the door bell sounded.

"It's dear mamma and Aunt Lizzie come to spend the evening," said Mina, jumping up.

"Contented am I!" roared Mr. Cameron, snatching the table with his fist.
"I can't have a quiet evening even in a while!"

"I told you you would take us all to the theatre to-night," heated Mina, the color coming and going chaotically on her face.

"Indeed! May I ask, madam, who authorized you to make that statement?" cried her husband. "Am I a mere puppet in your hands, and am I supposed to have no will or desire of my own?"

"But you will go, won't you, Clarence?"
flattered poor Mina.

"No, madam, I will not," said Mr. Cameron, rising and looking round at his wife, as if he were about to propose to quit the scene.

At my club."

He bolted out of the room, never falling over his mother-in-law in the passage, and muttering to himself:

"By Jove! if I'd stayed another minute those tears would have conquered me.
Poor little Mina!"

It was past twelve before he returned.
Never, in all the experience of their married life, had he been so late before.

"Sitting up, eh?" said he, savagely.
"Now, Mrs. Cameron, I mean to put an end, once for all, to this sort of thing."
"I was so anxious about you, Clarence," pleaded poor Mina.

"Anxious!" severely repeated he.
"Do you suppose John Markan allows his wife to sit up for him?"

"Oh, Clarence, I wouldn't have you like John Markan here the world!" exclaimed Mina, bursting into tears.

"Wouldn't you?" said he, the faintest suspicion of a smile glimmering under the ends of his mustache. "Now, I thought it would be charming to be a little afraid of one's husband, didn't you?"

"Sweet and spicy and all that's nice," growls insipid.

Mrs. Cameron sprang to her feet.

"Clarence!"

"Mina!"

"Did you hear what I said this morning?"

"I did, Mrs. Cameron, and I thought I would shape my conduct to suit your taste."

"Don't do it any more, Clara," she said, with a quivering lip, and she brightened up fully to his face. "I don't like it; it isn't nice to be afraid of one's husband!"

"Just as you please," said the husband, laughing. "I only wanted to adapt myself to your wishes, Mina!"

"But I was such a goose!" cried Mina.
"Dear Clara, I have cried my eyes out to-night, trying to make out what could possibly have changed you so. And you were only making believe all the time?"

"Only making believe," he acknowledged.

And then they kissed and made friends, after the orthodox fashion, and their honey-moon began over again for the second time.

But Armina made no more complaints about Mr. Cameron being a "too devoted husband."—New York Weekly.

Some Features of the New Criminal Code.

Every person is guilty of an indictable offense, and liable to one year imprisonment, who, in a railway or on a steamboat, uses as a public conveyance for passengers, by means of any game of cards, dice or other instrument of gambling, or by any device of character, obtains from any person money, valuable security or other property.
For attempting to obtain money by actually engaging any person in such game is a like offense, and punishable with the same penalty. It is the duty of every conductor, master or superior officer in charge of any such railway or steamboat, to arrest whom he has good reason to believe, has either committed or attempted to commit the above offense, and to take him before a magistrate and make a complaint in writing. For neglect of duty in this respect, or if liable to a penalty of $100.

It is a like offense for any person to allow any part of his premises to be used, or for pool selling, to become the holder of any saw, to bet or sell pools upon the result of any political or municipal election, race or contest of skill of man or beast. The above does not apply to races on incorporated association tracks during the actual progress of a race meeting.

A penalty of two years imprisonment is imposed on every person who makes, prints, advertis or publishes, or causes the same to be, any proposal, scheme or plan for advertising, lending, giving, selling or in any way disposing of any property, by lots, cards, tickets, or any other mode of chance sale.
Every person who sells, or assists in the selling of such things. Every one who buys any such ticket, or lot, is liable to a penalty of $20.

A corner cannot be made for the first of murder or manslaughter by a corner's jury to be reversible by a magistrate.

Depositions before a justice on a preliminary inquiry must be read over and signed by the witness and the justice, the signed, witness and justice being all present together at the time of such reading and signing.

All indictments of persons at place of abode must state that it was made on some intimate thereof, apparently not under duress.
The summary trial of persons at place of abode is limited to the police limits of a force.

There is no summary conviction for assault if either complainant or accused is a woman.

Section 503 provides a punishment of seven years for the destruction of an election ballot or boxes.

The division between felony and misdemeanor is abolished.

The law of venue is abolished. Jurisdiction of courts, not confined to territorial limits, is now extended to the whole of the province.

The court may allow accused not to be present at trial.

Evidence of any witness in felony to require corroboration.

Any proceedings of the court on a Sunday are legal.

Writ of error is abolished.

Appeal when a reserved case, is refused.

A new trial may be ordered by the Minister of Justice.

The lottery law has also been greatly altered. At present the people dealing in lotteries are only subjected to a small fine, but this now makes it a more serious offence.
The penalty now for dealing in lotteries is imprisonment for two years and $2,000 fine.
All lotteries, except those run by the State, are prohibited. The consent of the Minister is required for these must be secured, and the articles so permitted must be offered for sale at a certain price and none of them must exceed the value of $100.

Two persons of sound mind and sane memory, who are not married to each other, may not be used against them to incriminate them.
