Poetry.
The College Graduate.
He sent his son to college to store his head with knowledge.
He sent a smart young fellow in his business house,
"And when he's educated, why, he's so reined."
He's just the one to take the reins and drive up to the head.
"They say he quite surpasses all the fellows in his class,
And I reckon he'll think nothing of my rather tawdry load.
I'm getting old and weary, but it makes the future cheerier
To think of less on my son's adobe life's western road."
Well he trotted a path of glory, did this student of my story,
And they dined him, and they wined him on his final college day.
But he broke each rule of grammar when he spoke as with a hammer,
And his knees they knocked together if you mentioned algebra.
But he shone forth as an aspirant, and he trained the living winter
For the spring and summer races, where his broad leather reins were needed,
And the old man looks redoubtable and thinks college rules defective.
While his son goes round the country with a jolly bunch of nines.
—Ella Wheeler Wilcox.

Selected Tale.
The Piece of Gold.
When Lucien Hem saw his last hundred franc note gripped by the bank-keeper's rake, and rose from the roulette table, where he had lost the last fragments of his little fortune, collected for this supreme struggle, he felt giddy and thought he was going to fall.
With a dizzy head and tottering legs, he went and threw himself down upon the broad leatherette sofa surrounding the play table.
For some minutes he gazed vacantly on the candelabraed gambling house, in which he had squandered the best years of his youth, recognized the ravaged faces of the gamblers, crudely lighted by the large brass shaded lamps; listened to the light jingle of gold on the cloth covered table; felt that he was ruined, lost; recollected that he had at home the pair of regulation pistols which his father, General Hem, when a single captain, had used so often in the attack of Zatchka; then, overcome by fatigue, he sank into a profound sleep.
When he awoke, with a parched mouth, he saw by the clock that he had slept for nearly half an hour, and felt an imperious need for breathing the night air. The clock hands marked a quarter before midnight. While rising, and stretching his arms, Lucien remembered that it was Christmas Eve, and, by an ironic trick of memory, he saw himself a little child, putting its ear into the chimney before going to bed.
At that moment old Dronski—a pillar of the gambling house, the classic Polak, wearing a three-barred hooded woollen cloak, ornamented all over with gaudy stains—approached Lucien, and muttered a few words in his grizzled beard.
"Lend me a five franc piece, monsieur. It's now two days since I have stirred out of the club, and for two days the 'seventeen' has never turned up. Laugh at me, if you like, but I'll suffer my hand to be cut off, if that number does not turn up on the stroke of midnight."
Lucien shrugged his shoulders. He had not even enough in his pocket to meet this task, which the frequenters of the place called "The Banker's hand," and he passed into the ante-chamber, took his hat and fur coat, and descended the stairs with feverish rapidity.
Since four o'clock, when Lucien had shut himself up in the gambling house, snow had fallen, and the streets and a street in the centre of Paris, very narrow, and built with high houses on either side—was completely white.
The ruined gambler shuddered under his fur, and walked away, his mind straggling with thoughts of despair, and more than ever turning to the remembrance of the case of pistols which awaited him in one of his drawers; but after moving forward a few steps, he stopped suddenly before a heart-wringing sight: a poor little child, and tiny shoulder pressed as if they had sunk into an angle of the wall, and reposing on the icy stone. One of her wooden shoes had fallen from her foot, which hung helplessly and lugubriously before him. Lucien put his hand to his waistcoat pocket, but, a moment afterward, he recollected that he had not been able to find even a forgotten piece of twenty sous, and was obliged to leave the club without giving the customary "tip" to the club attendant; yet, moved by an instinctive feeling of pity, he approached the little girl, and, given her a night's lodging, when in the wooden shoe which had slipped from her foot he saw something glitter.
He stooped. It was a good coin. Some charitable person, doubtless some lady, had passed by, had seen on this Christmas night the little wooden shoe lying in front of the sleeping child, and recalling the touching legend, had placed there, with a secret hand, a magnificent offering so that this poor abandoned one might believe in presents made by the infant Saviour, and preserve, in spite of her misfortune, some confidence and some hope in the goodness of Providence.
A gold piece! It was several days of rest and riches for the beggar, and Lucien, who was on the point of waking her to tell her that the beggar had not his ear in a hallucination, a voice—the voice of the Pole, with its coarse, drawing accent, almost whispering:
"It's now two days since I stirred out of the club and for two days the 'seventeen' has never turned up; I'll suffer my hand to be cut off, if that number does not turn up on the stroke of midnight."
Then this young man of three-and-twenty, descended from a race of honest men, who bore a proud military name, and who had never swerved from the path of honor, conceived a frightful idea. He was seized by a mad, hysterical, monstrous desire. After glancing on all sides, to make sure that he was alone, he stole the gold piece from the fallen shoe!

Harrying, then, with all his speed, he returned to the gambling house, scaled the stairs, two and three at a stride, and entering the scoured play room as the first stroke of midnight was sounding, placed the piece of gold on the green cloth, and cried:
"I stake on the 'seventeen'!"
The seventeen won.
With a start of the roulette pushed the thirty-six louis on to the red.
The 'red' won.
He left the seventy-two louis on the same color. The 'red' won again.
Twice he 'doubled'—three times—always with the same success. He had now before him a pile of gold and notes, and began to scatter stakes all over the board. All his bets were fortunate. His luck was unheard of, supernatural. It might have been imagined that the little ivory ball dancing in the roulette was magnetized, fascinated by the eyes of this player, and obedient to him.
Now, striking two or three hundred louis at a time, and aided by this strange run of luck, he was on the way to regaining and more besides, the hereditary capital he had squandered in so few years, and reconstituting his fortune.
In his eagerness to return to the gambling table, he had not taken off his fur coat. Already he had crumpled the large pockets with bundles of notes and rouleaux of gold pieces, and, not knowing where to heap his winnings, he now loaded the inner and exterior pockets of his frock coat, the pockets of his vest and trousers, his handkerchiefs—everything that could be made to hold his money.
And still he played, and still he won, like a mad man, like a drunken man.
Only something like a red-hot iron was in his heart, and he thought of nothing but of the little medallion sleeping in the corner, where he had robbed.
"Is she still at the same spot? Surely she must be still there! Presently—yes when one o'clock strikes—I swear it! I will quit this place! I will take her sleeping in my arms and carry her to my home. I will put her into a warm bed. I will bring her up, give her a dory, love her as if she was my own daughter, care for her always, always!"
But the clock struck one, and then a quarter, and then a half, and then three-quarters.
At length, one minute before two o'clock the keeper of the bank rose abruptly and said in a loud voice:
"The bank is broken, gentlemen—enough for to-day!"
With a bounding Lucien was on his feet. Roughly pushing aside the gamblers who surrounded and regarded him with envious admiration; he hurried away quickly, sprang down the stairs, and ran all the way to the stone bench. In the distance, by the light of a lamp, he saw the little girl.
"Heaven be praised!" he said; "she is still there."
He approached her, he took her hands. "Oh! how cold she is, poor little one!"
He took her under his arms and raised her, so that he might see her face; her head fell back without her awaking.
"How soundly children of her age sleep!"
He pressed her against his bosom to warm her, and, seized by a vague inquietude and with a vision of the child out of this heavy slumber, he kissed her eyelids.
Then it was that he perceived with terror that those eyelids were half open, showing half the eyeballs—glossy, lightless, motionless. Upon his brain flashed a horrible suspicion. He placed his mouth close to that of the little girl. No breath came from it.
While with the gold piece, which he had stolen from the medallion, Lucien had won a case of pistols at the gaming table, the homeless child had died—died of cold!
Made almost delicious by the most frightful agonies, Lucien tried to utter a cry, and, in the effort which he made, awoke from his nightmare on the club stool, on which he had gone to sleep a little before midnight, and where the attendant, who had quitted the house last, had left him out of charity.
The misty dawn of a December morning was greying the window panes.
Lucien went out into the street, plunged his watch, took a bath, breakfasted, and then went to the recruiting office, and signed an engagement as a volunteer in the First Regiment of Chasseurs d'Afrique.
At the present time Lucien Hem is a lieutenant. He has only his pay to live upon, but he contrives to make it suffice, by a very steady officer, and never touching a card. It appears even that he has found the means of saving; for the other day at Algiers, one of his comrades, who was a friend of his, at a far place distant, in one of the hills straggles of the Raaba, saw him give something in charity to a little Spanish girl sleeping in a doorway, and had the indiscretion to see what it was that Lucien had given the child.

Great was his surprise at the poor lieutenant's generosity.
Lucien Hem had put into the hand of the poor child a piece of gold!
Antiquity of the Human Race.
The Department of State, Washington, has received a dispatch from Minister Terrell, at Constantinople, announcing the results of American explorations now being conducted at the ruins of Niffer, near ancient Babylon. The expenses of the work are defrayed by an association of Philadelphia gentlemen formed under the name of the "Babylonian Exploration and." The work began in 1886, and, except on occasional intervals, has been actively conducted. Dr. Peters and Prof. Hehrich, of the University of Pennsylvania, began the work, and it is still continued by Dr. Peters. From 150 to 250 Arabs have been constantly employed.
In the number of tablets, bricks, inscribed vases and in the value of cuneiform texts found, this American enterprise rivals, if it does not excel, in the opinion of the minister, the explorations of Layard at Nineveh and Rassam's excavations at Abu-Hab.
Prof. Hehrich remains at the museum in Constantinople, at the request of the Turkish government, translating inscriptions and arranging tablets, bowls, and vases used from 1,000 to 4,000 years before Christ.
Many tons of tablets, etc., have already been procured, and the enterprise has revealed an antiquity for the human race nearly ten centuries older than had before been acknowledged by Biblical students. The report of the minister is very long and full of details of interest to archaeologists.

Crime and the Hamshoop.
The reason there is so little peace on the earth is because there is so much sin. A Christian is not worthy of the name if he does not strive to fight against sin, and this is the object of the temperance society. Temperance is one of those evils which takes a terrible hold on the appetite and is an evil by which temptations are multiplied. So the church and the civil authorities regard its traffic as most dangerous to the welfare of virtue and morality, and as Christians and citizens we ought to try to diminish its traffic. There are four sources which reach the rumshop for crime.
Temperance destroys health, weakens the moral and debars the individual and endangers the general moral condition in the community. The statistics of every state show that there is more crime and in every manner, more violence than any other cause. We have thousands of lives that were at one time shining lights around us. We have seen fathers and mothers whose pride was once children grow gray and their lives shortened by this evil. If we visit the jails, the workhouses and the insane asylums, we will find that the greater portion of the inmates are there through the effects of this cursed evil.
—Bishop Keane.

Communicated.
That Investigation.
To the Editors of the Carleton Sentinel:
I notice in the last issue of your valuable paper, under the above caption, you make what seems to me an extraordinary comment. You say, "There has been nothing elected to affect injuriously in any wise the government." To my mind, as I shall attempt to show, the facts do not by any means warrant such a statement. The facts brought out abundantly establish a condition of things discreditable to Mr. Ryan and much more to Mr. Wm. Pagley, than membership of the government. I do not think any one could claim to be satisfied with Hon. Mr. Emerson's method of conducting the investigation, and he deserves credit for holding a fair and open trial. The matter when he had the Leary and Quinn cases before him as precedent. The facts show that Mr. Ryan went to St. John in company with Mr. Wm. Pagley, and the commendation of Mr. Wm. Pagley, then Solicitor General in the government, hired Hamilton, Rutland and Stockton, at $3.00 and $2.50 per day for operating a bicycle, and a man instructed that it requires less exertion to travel fifteen miles in a bicycle than to walk three miles.

The London Temperance Hospital has passed its twentieth milestone as an object lesson in non-alcoholic medication. This splendid institution has accommodated over 1,000 patients during the past year and treated over 5,000 out patients.
A list has just been published of English places where absolute prohibition prevails. The principal of these are: Trestle Park, Liverpool, a large parish with 5,000 inhabitants, which has not a single public house; the large estate of Sir George Trevelyan, who does not allow any of his tenants to hold licenses; and the residential portion of the Duke of Devonshire's property, prohibition being provided under the will of the late Duke. Altogether there are over 1,000 parishes in England without a single public house.

Rum Known No Sex.
Dr. Brennan, Roman Catholic School Commissioner for the Province of Quebec, a professor at Laval University, and one of the ablest practitioners in Montreal, made a statement in a paper which he read before the American Health Association that created a great sensation among the women of this city.
The doctor said that, from his medical experience, he was in a position to say that in women the habit of tipping was as much prevalent and disastrous than was imagined. Within the last four months he had seen four women, each the mother of several children, and moving in good society, die from the effects of chronic alcoholism.

Crime and the Hamshoop.
The reason there is so little peace on the earth is because there is so much sin. A Christian is not worthy of the name if he does not strive to fight against sin, and this is the object of the temperance society. Temperance is one of those evils which takes a terrible hold on the appetite and is an evil by which temptations are multiplied. So the church and the civil authorities regard its traffic as most dangerous to the welfare of virtue and morality, and as Christians and citizens we ought to try to diminish its traffic. There are four sources which reach the rumshop for crime.
Temperance destroys health, weakens the moral and debars the individual and endangers the general moral condition in the community. The statistics of every state show that there is more crime and in every manner, more violence than any other cause. We have thousands of lives that were at one time shining lights around us. We have seen fathers and mothers whose pride was once children grow gray and their lives shortened by this evil. If we visit the jails, the workhouses and the insane asylums, we will find that the greater portion of the inmates are there through the effects of this cursed evil.

That Investigation.
To the Editors of the Carleton Sentinel:
I notice in the last issue of your valuable paper, under the above caption, you make what seems to me an extraordinary comment. You say, "There has been nothing elected to affect injuriously in any wise the government." To my mind, as I shall attempt to show, the facts do not by any means warrant such a statement. The facts brought out abundantly establish a condition of things discreditable to Mr. Ryan and much more to Mr. Wm. Pagley, than membership of the government. I do not think any one could claim to be satisfied with Hon. Mr. Emerson's method of conducting the investigation, and he deserves credit for holding a fair and open trial. The matter when he had the Leary and Quinn cases before him as precedent. The facts show that Mr. Ryan went to St. John in company with Mr. Wm. Pagley, and the commendation of Mr. Wm. Pagley, then Solicitor General in the government, hired Hamilton, Rutland and Stockton, at $3.00 and $2.50 per day for operating a bicycle, and a man instructed that it requires less exertion to travel fifteen miles in a bicycle than to walk three miles.
