A REMARKABLE CASE.
THE STRANGE EXPERIENCE OF
WM. B. HALL, OF ALDERHOT.

He Was Thought to be at Death's Door and the Red Cross Society Had Failed—A Final Effort to Regain Health was made, and he is today Alive, Strong and in Good Health.

(From the Hamilton Herald.)
One of the most attractive places in the county of Westmorland is the little village of Alderhot, situated on what is known as the Plains road, about five miles from the city of Hamilton. One of the best known residents of the village and surrounding country is Captain Hall, who has represented the Township of East Flamboro in the Municipal Council for a number of years, and who, with his family, is held in the highest esteem by all who know him. Recently a report of the Herald visited the home of Captain Hall for the purpose of investigating a story to the effect that the captain's home had been restored to health.

The Democrats have a strong leader in the report of the conference Mr. Wilson said: "If it is true that the great American Sugar Trust has grown so strong and so powerful that it is now a fact that it can pass the American Congress in which its interests are not adequately guarded; if, I say, that is true, I hope this House will never consent to adjustment. I hope, I say, that what ever the fate of the general tariff bill may be, this House will not consent to an adjustment until it has passed a single bill putting refined sugar on the free list." This attitude of declaration was received with tumultuous cheering by the Democrats.

When the system is all run down, and no hope of obtaining results by the ordinary food supply, then take Miller's Eucalypti, the great food and blood maker, "the kind that cures" colds, coughs, bronchitis and all diseases of the throat and lungs. Nothing Strange. Intelligent people who realize the importance of the blood in keeping the body in a normal condition, find nothing strange in the number of diseases that are cured by the use of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. So many troubles result from impure blood, the best way to treat them is through the blood. Hood's Sarsaparilla vitalizes the blood.

Hood's Pills are the best after-dinner pills, assist digestion, prevent constipation. The Kansas Legislature provides for a bounty of from $3 to $4 for the scalp of every wolf killed in that State. Some $60,000 have been paid in such bounties. It has recently been discovered that farmers have been making a business of breeding and raising wolves, with remarkable success for the sake of the bounty. Even the carcasses of the wolves killed were used as food for the growing wolves.

The Song My Mother Sang.

I oft have heard melodious rounds From the lips of beauty I love, Now gay and glad, now wild and sad, Now melting soft and low.

While fingers fair the harp strings sweep And gentle numbers ring, But I never heard a strain so sweet As the song my mother sang.

At evening's hour in summer time, While the cooling shadows fall, I oft have heard the lone night bird Sing forth in the distant dell.

I used to sit beside her knee— I used to sit beside her knee— And weeping, list to that sweet strain, To the song my mother sang.

And faintly breathe the fair, mild strains From Elysian fields of bliss, While white with the pale moonlight Crept round with a spirit's tread.

Perfumes strange were scattered there On the wings of zephyr's flung, While the twilight seemed to listen hushed, To the song my mother sang.

—From the Birmingham Age-Herald

Select Tale.

A VOICE FROM THE STORM.

With fierce gusts the wind sweeps across the ocean, lashing the mighty billows into fury, and hurling them with thunderous roar upon the shore. And far out at sea shines the light from that grand old tower which has braved a thousand storms.

How furiously the huge seas dash at it, leaping madly to its very summit, shaking its rocky foundation, still that light shines brightly from Eddy's tower.

But upon this stormy night, though the light reveals the peril, a vessel is striving in vain to avoid the jagged rocks, while each moment the light grows more hopeless. The group of fishermen watching upon the shore know that their destruction is very near, though they are powerless to aid. Onward she is hurled towards the rocks, round which the sea is a seething mass of foam. Then she is still; the waves leap madly over her, crushing her to pieces.

Even when the night has grown too dark to see the vessel, the fishermen remain gazing across the stormy sea as the tide rolls up the Channel. When day dawns, and every eye is turned to the spot where the vessel struck she is no longer there.

All through the day the wreckage is washed ashore; then they learn the vessel's name, and hasten with the news to the rectory. The old man's heart is filled with sadness as he hears his daughter break the news to her. He dreads to cause his beautiful child pain, yet he knows how great her grief must be. For upon that vessel her affianced husband was coming home to claim his fair young bride.

"My poor little Mabel!" the old man said, with tears in his eyes at his child's wild grief. "Herbert may have escaped. Have faith, my darling. All will come right—indeed it will, poor little Mabel. There is hope!"

"The ocean, papa, for me! Oh! why did he make me love him so? Is it wicked to love anyone so dearly?"

"Assuredly not, Mabel. If the worst has happened, remember this life is very short. It is the other life we should consider."

"Oh, papa! How can I think like you? You are good, but I am wicked. He is lost to me, and my life is ended. I have nothing left in all the dreary world!"

"I hoped you loved me, darling," the old man said in a low, tremulous voice. "But then I am not much to you. I fear I may not have quite fulfilled your dear mother's trust."

"Oh, papa!" cried Mabel, flinging her arms around her father's neck, and sobbing and weeping while he kissed her golden hair. "Dear, dear papa, forgive me! I love you better than my life. But I loved him better than my soul; and now he is taken from me!"

Days passed, but the sea gave up her dead; but no living being came to recount the horrors of that stormy night. When the great ship sank to her grave, it was but another spot on the wreck chart.

Still the old rectory hoped, and tried to instill his faith in his daughter's breast. But day by day the stormy night came to the seashore with a look of such deep misery in her beautiful blue eyes that her father scarcely dared to meet that sorrowful gaze. And every wave that burst in silver spray upon the shore sent his heart throbbing through his breast; for he knew her darling lay beneath those glittering waters.

The air is hot and sultry. The sun streams down with a power never felt in England. Many men and women stand by the harbor, watching the great vessel speed on her voyage to the other side of the world, and many women are weeping—though, God knows! they will weep more bitterly when they learn the end of that voyage.

Suddenly the crowd is parted, and a young man dashes up, followed by a manservant carrying a portmanteau. A look of despair is upon the young man's handsome face as he gazes at the vessel speeding on her way.

"Sure, now," observed the manservant, flinging the trunk down and seating himself upon it, while he gazed complacently at the departing vessel, "your honor's a grand runner, entirely. If we hadn't a just missed that blooming boat we would have caught it to a certainty."

It is a very certain thing that when a man is angry it is imperative he should have someone to vent his rage upon. The young man could scarcely vent his spleen upon the ladies who were looking at him compassionately, for he was very handsome, so he turned on his servant.

"If you look about it, Pat, I'll fling you into the water!" he cried savagely.

"Sure, now, if the ladies would only just let me take off a few of my clothes. Golly, it's hot! There's one consolation, your honor. If we missed the blooming boat—and it looks as though we had—we'll be in plenty of time for the next. The next boat ain't gone, and chance it!"

The ladies laughed. The young man looked very angry. Taking a cigar from his pocket, he mechanically lighted it; then, as the full force of his disappointment fell upon him, he savagely flung the cigar on the ground, and Pat,
