Poetry.

Lines in Memory of the Late

William King.

(For the Carleton Sentinel.)

Death again has entered 'monget us,

Dealt again a cruel blow,

As in martial field his missives

All respected and deplore;

Lay the old and youthful low

From amongst us now we miss one

Now may see his face no more.

Last year in good health we saw him

Now the Mower Death has mowed him,

In the hay field, strong and well,

By the keen steel severed fell :

As he did the grass and grain,

In a peaceful rest remain.

the land of his adoption,

Where a competence he won, Rests he from his labors calmly,

For his life's work well was done.

Worthy man, and kindly neighbour, Gone long ere the lotted days,

All who knew thee speak thy praise.
