A Song of Growth.

That's the way the green grass grows, All in cosey, thick-set rows.

How do the grassee grow?

Just a bit a day,

Looking upward all the while,

They unfold from bud to flower

Till our eyes they meet
Pure and perfect. So they grow,
Roses red, and white as snow.

In their tiny nests?
They stretch out their wings each day,

Do they quarrel, all these things,
As they grow and grow?
See them laugh and shake their heads,

Huddled 'neath the breasts

All their wants so quick to mind.

"Quarrel? Oh, no, no!

We've no time for querrelling;

Taller, larger, sweeter still,

Through the days and hours, Learning something new each day, That will help them on their way.

We must grow, and laugh and sing

Like the birds, grass and flowers,
