Great alarm was created the other day in one of the principal courts of justice at Berlin, by the preciding judge suddenly becoming insene on the bench. Hie lussoy was first made apparent when, without the alightest provocation, he sternly inquired of a witness whether she liked potatoes. The surprise created by this question was intensified when the judge proceeded to make the most horrible grimaces at the witness, and to talk at random on the most incongruous subjects, until finally led away by the court attendants.
