Poetry. Our Native Land.

W. WELDON SCOTT. (continued.) How oft when ships go down at sea. Content to perish with the wreck,

Though all the crew have left save he, The captain bravely keeps the deck. A life to lose, a life to 8 ve, Rests in the balance of his will

Tis eweet to live, and life he loves But loves the vessel dearer still. And thus by bonde inseperable, Should every min uni ed be, Though Death that union seal unto,

The land of his nativity. Tis not for bards alone to sing, A country's praise in rybthmic lays, But Daty biddeth every man, The merite of his country praise. Since Daty bide, I'll gladly yield.

Obedience to his command, And tell with pride in simple verse, The praises of our parive land. The land where youth's bright days were

Mid sunny joys and childish fears. When golden expectations yield,
The prospects of our future years. When borne upon Ambitions wings,

Our hopes arose to wonderous heights, For youthful hopes often outdo, The eagle in his airy fights. Where fund Ambition formed the ties,

That cling to us where e'er we roam. Laved foot of tender memories, Man's desrest refuge, 'Home sweet (To be continued)
