Poetry.
Night.
I drink the dew from counted streams That glide amid the flowers, Where lovers stroll in blissful dreams,
And call the passion flowers.
I brood o'er forests dark and lone, Where mournful breezes sighing Seem like some restless spirits moaning, Or like poor hearts a-dying.
I sink amid the ocean waves, Yet calm in their confusion, While ships are plunged in deep-sea graves, A homeward bound confusion.
I pause upon the mountain height,
When all the world is sleeping,
And view the distant fading light Mid lengthen'd shadows creeping.
I spread my sail upon the tomb, Where sleepers know no waking, Till death and I are brought to doom, When endless day is breaking.
—By Arthur Dornell.
St. Laurent College, March 25, 1894.

Select Tale.
HIS PROMISE.
The wind came sighing in from the breast of the ocean, stretching away under the northern sky.
The steady wash of the surge as it came slowly in could not rouse the man who lay upon his face under the sheltering rocks.
He was not asleep, for at times his frame trembled, and now and again he half started up and looked across the sea, and then dropped his head again.
He was a young man, and a sailor—he had that every line of his face and motion of his form—strong and young, with sunburned features and blue eyes, a man framed by nature to make the world better because he had done his part in it.
But there was great agony now in that brave young face as from time to time he lifted it.
Then came a light step along the gravel, and he started up quickly as a fair young girl, with the sunny hair and cheerful eyes, and this young sailor, lying there upon the sand, loved her with an unutterable affection—a depth of love it was hard for her to understand.
"Richard Dean," she cried, "why are you lying here alone?"
"Richard," she said again, "what is it?
Why do you look so sad?"
"I don't know what to say to you, Milly," he answered slowly, "because I don't like to give you pain, but sometimes it seems to me that I would have been better for better, if I had gone down with the schooner last autumn, instead of living to endure this great anguish."
"I don't know what you mean, dear Richard," and I was always friends, and you know that I would have been broken my heart. An hour ago I was on the point, sitting under the trees, and I heard—I couldn't help it, Milly—I heard Harry Watson said to you." A flush stole into the white cheek of the girl as she turned away her head.
"I heard Harry tell you that he loved you, and I heard you say that you loved him, and then I stole away, not to hear more."
"I love you as man never loved woman in all time," he said, "and so well that for a moment it seemed to me that I hated Harry Watson, because he robbed me of my jewel."
"But I knew him to be good and true, a kind son, a tender brother, and he will make you happier perhaps than I ever did. Don't ever could."
"Oh, Dick," she said softly, "I never dreamed that you—"
She stopped suddenly.
"I have been to blame, and while you loved me as a sister loved a brother I loved him as a man, and that is the feeling deeper."
"There, there, I am a man, Milly, I'll tell it down in time; give me awhile to draw breath and understand my love.
When you are to be married?"
"After this trip," she said softly, "when the Hesperus comes back."
"And I am first mate of the Hesperus and Harry second. And we've been friends so long that—but it isn't possible that I could ever hate Harry Watson or love him any more, but I wish he were in another schooner."
"Dick," cried Milly suddenly, "you are going out with the man I love in the same ship."
"There will come an hour of dark temptation to you, a dreadful hour, when you will have to choose between good and evil."
"When that time comes and the tempter whispers in your ear, promise me, in the name of the love you bear me you will think of me."
He drew his breath hard.
"I'll try, Milly," he said quickly.
"And take this," she said, forcing a ring into his hand. "Take it, wear it on your finger night and day, and when you see it, remember that you are pledged to do right by Harry Watson." He took the ring and looked at it in a strange dazed way, and then thrust it forcefully upon his finger.
"I'll do it," he cried. "Heaven help me to keep this vow."
So the Hesperus sailed in an hour, and as they swept out between the piers Dick Dean saw Millicent in Durand's standing there, with her fingers on her lips in tokens of remembrance.
She was so engrossed with him that for a moment it seemed to the second mate looking on jealously that she had no eyes for him.
Harry Watson was a noble young man, but he had one vice, jealousy, and the last glance he gave Milly as the Hesperus swept on was one of anger.
"I'd like to ask you something, Dick Dean," he said, coming up to the first mate.
"Stand by to set the fra'l," replied Dick who was a seaman from top to toe.
"Cast off the tackle, lively. Heave hearty, men!"
"But I want to speak!"
"I haven't got time to palaver now until we get the schooner under way, and even then it would be better to let the matter drop. Ready there in top! Let fall, sheet home and hoist away!" A few moments more and the good schooner was bowling along before a tenknot breeze, with the wind over the quarter, her best point of sailing.

Then Dick walked slowly forward, and Harry came up to him again.
"Dick turned upon him like a tiger."
"Now, look here, Harry," he said.
"You and I have been good friends, but I know what you want to say, and you'd better not say it. I give you fair warning that I ain't safe."
"What are you going to do about it?" demanded Harry defiantly. "I'd have you know that I understand how you have sneaked and crawled to undermine me—" A cry like that of a wild beast burst from the lips of the young sailor.
He gasped for breath, and for a moment it looked as if he would strike Harry, but he seemed to recollect himself, and turning on his heel he sprang to the cabin.
All through the trip these two, who had been dear friends, did their duty by the ship; but, working side by side, they never spoke.
So they worked in sullen silence, and after a month of absence the schooner was standing in for her own port, perhaps twenty miles away, in one of the darkest nights that ever fell upon the ocean, and with a gale blowing which threatened at any moment to take the stick out of her.
The captain lay in the cabin stunned by the fall of a block, and Dick worked the schooner. And there was a loud exultant ring in his voice as he gave the word of command.
"Two miles out of port a rocky point ran out to sea—a point on which the bones of many a craft had been laid." But Harry was thinking of Milly—of Milly, who waited and watched for his coming, and he thought, with a pang at the heart, that perhaps after all he had wronged her and Dick.
Then came a great crash, an awful yell from the men, and the schooner was rocked and the great breakers beating against her with cruel force.
"Send up a rocket," cried Dick in a hoarse, strained voice. "Ha! They see us!
There goes a light!"
And then flashed up on the beach a bonfire. In its light men were seen dashing here and there, and then, pushed by eight strong rowers, the lifeboat darts out.
They brought up the injured captain and laid him on the deck, and he was the first they lowered into the boat as it came up.
The men went down one by one until only Harry and Dick remained upon the deck.
"Go!" commanded Dick. "Shall only bear one more, and it won't be Dick Dean. You suspected me of loving Milly. I did, longer than you think, more than you know. Get into the boat!"
"I will not!" cried Harry.
"She said, 'In that dreadful hour, when you have to choose between good and evil, think of me and do right.'" Take him, men."
He caught Harry suddenly by the shoulders and dropped him into the boat.
He bore away instantly, for it could not have borne another without filling.
Next day they found his body upon the shivering sand with his head pillowed on one brawny arm and a smile upon his face, which only good men wear—men who die at the end of the world.
And Harry Watson, coming with his children to his last resting place, speaks a-while the story of that night when the Hesperus was wrecked on that point.
Thoughts for the Thoughtful.
Above all things we need Him in our lives. In running our race we must look to Jesus. Sometimes in using other helps we forget Him, and largely crowd Him out of our lives; even the best of men do this. Our liability to error here is strikingly set forth by the noted hero of Junius, one of the old, old Saints of by-gone years. Junius was perfectly satisfied with himself and with the success in his life. His dream was this: One night a stranger came into his room and greeted him with a smile, and asked him, "Junius, how is your zeal?" Conceiving of his zeal as a physical quantity, Junius put his hand to his bosom and brought his seal forth and presented it to the stranger for inspection. The stranger took it and put it into the scales which he carried, and carefully weighed it.
"One hundred pounds," he exclaimed.
Junius was pleased. The stranger, pushing his investigation further, broke the mass into atoms, and put all into a crucible, and put the crucible into the fire, when the mass was thoroughly tried, he took it out and set it down to cool.
It cooled in cooling, and when turned out on the hearth exhibited a series of layers or strata, all of which fell apart at the touch of the hammer. The stranger severely tested and weighed each, and took careful notes. When he had finished he presented the analysis to Junius a candidate for the crown of glory. His zeal amounts in all to one hundred pounds. Bigotry, ten pounds; personal ambition, twenty-three pounds; love of praise, nineteen pounds; pride of denomination, fifteen pounds; pride of talent, fourteen pounds; love of authority, twelve pounds; love to follow man, three pounds; love to Jesus Christ, four pounds. When he read the paper Junius was smitten with instantaneous conviction, and cried to heaven, "O Christ take Junius out of my life, and put thyself into it. Help me to live by Thee and for Thee. Like the reconstructed Junius, we should make Christ our goal in life. The building up of self and the winning of the approbation of the good, should be made secondary and contributory to our loyalty to Christ."

We regret to have practical proof every week that farmers are selling out their holdings in this county and going over the line into adjoining States, or further away to the west.
One million four hundred and eleven thousand dollars ($1,411,000) expended on the militia since a pretty large sum when, apparently, quite as practical results might be secured for a very much less expenditure annually. Over 28,000 men have been sent to the front, the expenditure on the entire army, including militia, of Great Britain in '93, was only $230 per head.

ANOTHER MONO MIRACLE.

HOW A BRIGHT LITTLE GIRL'S LIFE WAS SAVED

A Terrible Sufferer from St. Vitus' Dance —Could Not Feed Herself and Had to be Closely Watched—A Public Acknowledgement by Her Grateful Parents.
From the Publishers Economist.
Many of the readers of the Economist have doubtless been impressed to a certain extent by the reports of marvellous cures effected in various parts of the country by the intelligent use of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People, and yet in the minds of a few there may linger just the shadow of a doubt regarding the veracity of these reports. To be candid, the writer of this article, once used to have in the past a desire to avoid the miracle column of the papers, but now he admits that were the case anything like that which came under his personal observation a few days ago, the proprietors cannot say too much concerning these pills and their curative powers in the many diseases which afflict flesh and bone.

One day last week the reporter waited upon Mr. and Mrs. John Lindsay at their home, Lot 31, Con. 1, E. H. S. township of Monk, and listened to the words of grateful acknowledgment which came from their lips while describing the terrible malady from which one of their children had been suffering, and of the complete restoration to health effected by the use of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. It appears that during the winter of 1891 the child, Fernie Ella May by name, now aged about seven years, was seized with a gripe. One night during her illness her father heard her sobbing and ran to her bed.
The child appeared to be in a terrible fright and for some time could not be soothed, and although she apparently recovered from the usual symptoms of a gripe, she was never the same in health and strength. Her appetite seemed to have become deranged, and as time passed the terrible symptoms of St. Anthony's or St. Vitus' dance were noticed by the parents. Doctors were called for her, but instead of getting better she became worse, until the parents had given up all hope. She could not feed herself, and her parents had to turn her. She was perfectly helpless and had almost lost the power of speech. When she did speak it was with difficulty and her tongue was drawn to one side and she had lost control of it. She had a strange distorted look that forbade the use of restraint. The condition of the poor child was pitiable in the extreme. One day about the end of January the father read of the cure effected by Dr. Williams' Pink Pills, and he secured a box from Mr. Brown, druggist, of St. John's. They commenced the treatment by giving the child three pills, and after each meal—and never varied from that treatment to the end. Before the first box was used they were weak, and the child's appetite was improving, and by the time the three boxes were used she had improved to a marvellous extent. In April the child was having fully regular bowels, and was able to eat and drink. The mother said that the child's appetite was improving, and the mother said that the child's appetite was improving. Several months have passed since then and there has been no relapse, and no sign of a return to the terrible malady.
The cure seems to be complete, and the parental anxiety has been removed. The parenter state emphatically to Dr. Williams' Pink Pills saved the life of their child. The child's appetite was improving, and the child's appetite was improving. Several months have passed since then and there has been no relapse, and no sign of a return to the terrible malady. The cure seems to be complete, and the parental anxiety has been removed. The parenter state emphatically to Dr. Williams' Pink Pills are a specific for
