To Parents.

Often parents have been bitterly disap pointed in their children; when young they could feel so deeply and speak s beautifully; but they had not lived long before all was lost. It was probably be cause parents trusted to what was a blessed, still only a feeble, beginning. They did not watch over the evil influences which the young plant could not yet re-sist. They allowed the spirit of the world in their own religious life or their friends; they allowed company or ples sure and the enjoyment of the world t choke the good seed; or they failed t supply the needful nourishment. There the personal speaking of the blessed Je sus, the helping of faith and obedience by the fellowship and example of a warm, tiving Christianity—a living love to Jesus. The child's religion disappeared because the parents hindered it in coming to Jesus. How different the result is when this coming to Jusus is, in a right spirit, fostered and encouraged, not only in the little ones, but in the growing boy and the cry sounded, nearer and plainer than girl through the years that lead to maturity. We need to be kept from righthand as well as from left-hand errors. Oa the one side, we must beware of despising a child's religious impressions as of little value. Like all beginnings of life and growth, they may be feeble and easily lost; they are still of infinite value as the preparation for that which abideth forever. We must, on the other side, be kept from overestimating or trusting in it.

We must remember that the tender plant needs unceasing watching, and that only Thet cry is a trick o' the holy to the Lord, and wholly dedicated to Lady Henry Somerset says that, lately, a paper advocating the liquor treffic did her the honor to write her a letter of good advice on the subject of woman's sphere. They said it was a thousand pities that women should now foreske the sweet, old-fashioned charities, that they should elbow their way to public platforms, endeavoring to copy men and adopt a public line of life. Then she turned to the advertising pages of the paper and saw the following advertisement "Wanted, a tall, good looking young woman to act as barmaid; photograph indispensable." And she asked : "Is this the sweet sanctity of the home where the woman has to kept?' If certain women were to be set apart for such a calling, did it not behoove women with true, motherly hearts to go out and plead that their load might be lightened and that they might be drawn back again into the circle of the home influence from
