Sighing for spring. O. the winter's cold and dreary And we're sighing for the Spring. We are watching for the robin And we long to hear him eing We want to see the oriole, And the bluebird and the wren; O, we're weary of the Winter

And we want the Spring sgain. We are surfeited with pleasures That the snows of Winter bring, We are longing for the fragrant And the soothing sir of Spring And the frost flowers of the Winter-Ab. their charms for us are o'er, For we want the gentle dairies And the butter cape once more.

O, the symphony of Winter, Its wild music is sublime; But the song has lost its rhythm, And the tune has lost is time; And we want the rippling music Of the & neful springtime breeze As it dances o'er the mesdow, As it whispers 'mong the trees.

We would change our snowy barre For the clover-covered plais; We would change the elect of Winter For the gentle April rain. We are longing for the wild birds And the songe they used to sing. Yes, we're weary of the Winter And we're eighing for the Spring.
