Let it at once be understood that a man is strictly trustworthy, that he can be counted on in all the ordinary emergencies of life, and confidence and unlimited credit are within his reach. Many a man has a reputation of far greater value than a bank deposit, for that by some accident may be destroyed or diverted from its legitimate purpose; but the name is a guarantee for all its owner promises. In years past, when values had a more fixed standard, when there was less speculation and not so much of what is called "trading upon paper" as at present, the statement that a man's word was as good as his bond was more common than it is now-a days. To have this said of a man, especially one who is comparatively young, is the greatest compliment that can be paid him.
