What was-there it was again-a scratching at the window. She listened -her heart beating a wild tattoo against her ribs. Yes-there again-somebody was trying to break in!

Only a sliding door separated Mrs. Fielding's room from her daughter's. Her teeth chattered in time with the wild throbbing of her pulses. Mrs. sadly in need of some one to look after Fielding crept out of bed and, the sliding door being partly open, into her daughter's room. Ethel was slumbering peacefully, but a touch woke her. There was a hurried explanation in whisper from Mrs. Fielding, and then the two Barrister, Notary Public, may be in a more sensible frame of stole into the outer bedroom and once more listened. The scratching had ceased, and only the shuffling sound could be heard; then there were footsteps on the gravel walk, and then the scullery window (which was immediately beneath) was shot up with a force that denoted a careless haste on the part of the midnight intruder. 'A burglar!' exclaimed Ethel, pale to the lips, for she was only nineteen, and an ordinary girl with ordinary nerves. 'Ill wake Mr. Waterbury,' said Mrs. Fielding. She tripped swiftly out of the room, down the passage, and rapped at
