1837-The Jubilee-1897. Her Court was pure, her life serene;

God gave her peace, her land repose; A thousand claims to reverence closed, In her as mother, wife and Queen. The wid, world over next Tuesday will be a day memorable for the most notable celebration of modern times. In countries not under the sway of Queen Victoria there will be, if not national, yet personal recognition of the event, on that day to be celebrated, by Englishmen who are to be found in large communities everywhere; these will in one way or another evince an enthusiastic regard for the Queen. Throughout the wide demain of Britain's ascendency the voice of acclaim will be raised and the spirit of patriotic love be evoked, by millions of her subjects who will turn toward the Venerable Lady who for sixty years has reigned over them and lived in their hearts-reigned as the wise and constitutional sovereign; reigned as woman, wife, mother, illustrating all the noblest sentiments to those relations respectively belonging. Among the hearty aspirations and benedictions of the peoples of her vast dependencies and climes there will be no people who will feel and evince a more pure and hearty spirit of affection than will the people of Canada.

The history of the sixty years of Victoria's reign is indeed remarkable for the advances made in civilization, with all of best implied in that term and in connection with Remarkable in many ways is the position occupied by our good Queen to-day, not only because of the unexampled length of her reign, but she has outlived-

Already strange costumes and foreign looking uniforms are making the streets of London always a panorama, gayer even than don always a panorama, gayer even than city. All these strange costumes, these odd uniforms, are worn by men in the allegiance of Great Britain. They are titularly at least the Queen's loval subjects. A group in of Great Britain. They are titularly at least the Queen's loyal subjects. A group in which the European uniform is poetized by the Oriental turban is already known to be made up of the Indian guard of honor, sel ected from the native officers of the Imperial Indian army, picked for the duty as a reward for distinguished services. Then there are representatives from far off African and other colonial services; negro horse and foot other colonial services; negro horse and foot from Sierra Leone and the West Indies, white troopers from the Cape of Good Hope, from Canada, and from Cyprus. All the world the Reman legions and catches but the giltter that arms and armor give. All the world will watch it. Jealous European eyes as they see that striking representation, that impressive object lesson of the power which can be set in motion by the clicking of a telegraph machine in a dingy looking building in Downing street, may realize that peace is policy. They will see that here is a country not given over to militarism, a land where conscription is unknown in time of peace, which is armed at all points simply because her people are free and determined by voluntary effort to be always ready to maintain their freedom. Free as they are their sway is owned by hundreds of millions of men of other races and other creeds, who find in it safety for their dearest institutions and who cherish it as not to be for a montant entertheless of the grounds will be improved.
