A TAR'S REVENGE.

A strange man was Tom Dalton, first mate of the whaler Ironbow-a strong nan among the strong ones. In person he was six feet in height and well pro portioned, and for muscular power he beat anything I ever saw in my life. Yet not get over the idea that he had suffer-Meals served on arrival of all trains and plenty avenge. He seemed to be always lookbut he'd give one single, penetrating look and then drop his eyes, as if it was not the man he was looking for. I told him one day how he seemed t please God! You may be thankful for one thing, my lad. 'And what is that?' I said. 'That you are not the one I'm looking for,' he answered, with a look I didn't inderstand then, but learned the mean ing later. 'See here, Jack, I must trust some one or this thing will drive me mad. I want to find a man with the little finger gone from the right hand—a sailorman, with three stars in India Ink in the palm of his right hand and the letter G

He was a fine, tail fellow, just the kind of a man and wanted to ship as harpooner.

He sailed under the name of Gus Wila handsome face, black curling hair, and a devil may care look in his eyes. Al- Blake? though he was hail fellow well met with the crew, I didn't like the look of the man and made up my mind that I didn't want him for a chum. If I'd known what he was it seems to me now that I d have dropped him over the rail some dark night before we were fairly out of port. The captain shipped him when Tom Dalton was away on another island looking after a Kanaka or two that used to sail with him, and so it happened that they didn't meet until the night before we sailed, and as he always did, Tom looked at the new man hard for a moment and then threed away. When the new man heard the name of the mate, I thought he gave a little start and turned a trifle pale, though why he did that I didn't understand. We were well out to sea and bowling along before a ten knot breeze when Tom came to me as I stood by the rail. 'Where does Gus Williams hail from, Jack?' he asked.

'Martha's Vineyard, he says. I won't answer for it that he tells the truth.' 'Do you like him?'

'No. He's got the devil in him somewhere and it's bound to come out. He's as queer a stick as ever I saw in my life, and I don't want to chum with him.' There was one thing about Gus that was rather queer, and I asked him one day why he wore the finger of an old glove on his right hand. He said he had got a bad joint there, and he had to wear a cover to keep the salt water out.

I didn't mind that so much, but on day I was working on a boat and he was helping me and holding the spike and somehow I managed to hit him on the finger covered by the glove and he didn't vade sound and healthy lungs. The lungs even flinch, and then I was sure of one thing, and that was that he had no finger

I didn't say anything, but somehow it struck me as queer that this man should receive the proper amount of life-giving nutriment. The liver becomes torpid and have a finger missing, and Tom had asked me to look f r such a man.

I didn't think any more of it till one night in the forecastle, when we were all night in the forecastle, when we were all pretty full of grog, the young men got to lungs. A slight cold leads to inflammation, the bacilli invade the lungs and we bragging about themselves and the girls, and Gus Williams looked up and laughed.

'You might brag if you had the luck l've had,' he said. 'There's only one looked up and laughed. Consumption are cured by Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. Things went on all right until one September day when we were lying the Alaskan coast, the captain sent three boats ashore for some timber he wanted, and I went in Tom's boat. Gus Williams, who was harpoon in the second mate's boat, went too. I saw Tom come up and speak to Williams after they landed, and they went away together, and something put it into my head to follow them. There had been a light snow, and it was easy trackingthem, and after I had gone a

I've wondered sometimes if the tarry jacket came home and married her. 'I'll tell you the end,' hissed Tom. 'When she got your cruel letter, she drooped and faded, and when the man who loved her truly came home from a cruise she was very near the grave. Then one day when the burden of her life grew too much for her to bear, she told him of your deceit, and described you, and then died with her head upon his bosom.
