A September Song.

In the glory of September, Ere the forest has lit an ember,

On the tip of each green bough, Come, and let us sing of gladness Chastened by a touch of sadness,

Snowing on each singer's brow

Sadness for the Summer passing: Sorrow for the shadow's massing,

Ohill and dreary on the plains; G'adness, that so much is left us; Joy, that Love has not bereft us

Of his higher, nobler strains.

Sing of Him the mighty Giver!

Who, from nature's teeming quiver, Draws the arrows of the blast;

Sing and drink a health to Winter,

That his barge is all while steering

Toward celestial resected steeps

When the storm shall rend and splinter
