Selegt Tale. A PASSAGE AT ARMS.

The man from Africa did not thin much of the professor. From his 'place at little Mrs Arran's right hand he sometimes included the scientist in a casual glance, in which supreme self satisfaction was slightly tinged with contempt, but

With the professor it was otherwise. He looked at the stranger more than once with curious if rather absent eyes, and at last made a remark; 'I seem to know the face.

'Do you?' asked his friend Barringon, who overheard. 'Where have you Professor Herne could not remember.

The man from Africa owned a loud and somewhat penetrating voice. He had been successful at Johannesburg and posessed a large and seasonable selection of stories. Anecdotes of Rand life had far less interest for the professor than the pebble inscriptions of prehistoric man, but he could not help observing that the newcomer was monopolizing the attention not only of the other visitors, but of the Somehow the knowledge depressed him, and he bent a little lower over his plate. 'I almost wish,' he said softly, 'that I ad not gone away.'

You were not disappointed, were you?" 'Oh, no,' was the reply. 'As a geoogical expedition ours was entirely successful. I was thinking of something else-a private matter.'

'By the way,' said Barrington a mo-ment later, 'our new friend has some good stories, but he does not tell all If some reports be true, he is not exacty the hero our hostess seems to believe

'Indeed?' was the low remark. 'No. Herries of the rifl+ police has heard something of him He is home on leave, and I met him in town last week. According to his account, our friend here got into trouble more than once through his queer method of man-

Only the professor heard the final words, and when he heard them his eyes seemed to harden peculiarly, and he gave another glance toward the head of the

'Ah.' he said, 'is that so? By the bye, what is his name? I have forgotten.' 'Rugman.' replied the doctor. 'I believe he intends to settle down at Hexminster. We shall be little the better

'Very little,' was the professor's unusually decisive answer, and when it was spoken he fell into a train of thought from which his companion's remarks could not easily arouse him. The man from Africa had arrived at the old cathedral city on a visit to a friend, and had created something of a ripple upon those quiet waters. He had gained an entrance into that select circle which made Mrs. Arran's table its favored place of meeting and had even won his way to the seat of honor.

Alas for the professor! He had been supplanted, and the allegiance of the gentle, sweet faced little Judge of Probate. Clerk of the Circuit and County woman at the head of the table had been Courts, Victoria County.

given to another. So he pondered, sitting almost in lence until the gentlemen moved to the drawing room. There he found a nook where he was farthest from the sound of the strong an overwhelming voice of his supplanter and sat down.

Presently he was aroused by a touch upon the sleeve A rather delicate looking boy of 12 had approached him un-'Why, Jack,' said the professor, 'I did not see you! How are you?' 'I'm glad you are back, sir,' he said 'Indeed! Thank you,' was the professor's reply. 'Did you get any fossils, sir? You know you promised me some.' The geologist smiled. 'Perhaps,' he said. 'You shall come to my rooms to-

His words had been spoken to be heard by all. Mrs Arran looked up to listen, and Mr Rugman turned to see who had interrupted him. It was the professor.

'When I was junior master at a public school,' he repeated, 'an incident occured which seems to bear upon this question. It was a decidedly unpleasant case'—
Everybody was listening now, for the professor had been known to tell a story

'There was a boy in the school whom we may call Smith,' resumed the professor, apparently unconscious of the general interest. 'He was in the sixth form, tall, strong and athletic, a leader in all CHURCH PEWS, sports and over 18 years of age. There was another boy whom I will call Brown. The professor paused again. 'It went on for a long time,' he then the women of western nations, through false ideas of delicacy, suffer in silence untold agony, and sometimes death, through neg-lect of their health in a womanly way. Women, who suffer in this way shrink from the embarrassing examinations and local treatment insisted upon by the majority of physicians. If they only knew it, there is no necessity for these ordeals. An emi-nent and skillful physician long since discovered a remedy that women may use in the privacy of their own homes. It is Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription. It acts distrength, vigor and elasticity. It stops all debilitating drains. It is the greatest of all nerve tonics and invigorators for women. Thousands of women who were weak, sickly, petulant and despondent invalids are to-day happy and healthy as the result of the use of this wonderful medicine. Good druggists do not advise substitutes for this incomparable remedy.

"I have used Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescrip-tion and 'Golden Medical Discovery' in my family," writes Mrs. G. A. Conner, of Alleghany Springs, Montgomery Co., Va., "and have found them to be the best medicines that I ever used."
