The Man Behind the Plow.

There's been a lot to say about the man behind the gun,
And folks have praised him highly for the noble work he's done;
He won a lot of honor for the land where men are free,
It was him that sent the Spaniards kitin' back across the sea;
But he's had his day of glory, had his little spree, and now
There's another to be mentioned—he's the man behind the plow.

A battleship's a wonder and an army's mighty grand,
And warrin's a perfession only heroes understand;
There's somethin' sort o' thrillin' in a flag that's wavin' high,
And it makes you want to holler when the boys go marchin' by;
But when the shoutin's over and the fightin's done, somehow,
We find we're still depending on the man behind the plow.

They sing about the glories of the man behind the gun,
And the books are full of stories of the wonders he has done;
The world has been made over by the fearless ones who fight;
Lands that used to be in darkness they have opened to the light;
When God's children snarl the soldier has to settle up the row,
And folks haven't time for thinkin' of the man behind the plow.

In all the pomp and splendor of an army on parade,
And all through the awful darkness that the smoke of battle made;
In the halls where jewels glitter and where shoutin' men debate,
In the palaces where rulers deal out honors to the great,
There is not a single person who'd be doin' bizness now
Or have medals if it wasn't for the man behind the plow.

We're a bildin mighty cities and we're gainin' lofty heights;
We're a-winnin' lots of glory and we're settin' things to rights;
We're a showin' all creation how the world's affairs should run,
Future men'll gaze in wonder at the things that we have done,
And they'll overlook the feller, jist the same as we do now,
Who's the whole concern's foundation—that's the man behind the plow.

Select Tale.

A DOUBLE ROMANCE.

Young Pierce impressed any one at first sight as an energetic fellow, and he is. I know of his energy by experience with him in business extending over two years.

It was Morgan, or rather the Morgans, husband and wife, who caused him to settle in our western town. That much I have known all along, but I never knew just why in particular the Morgans took such a parental interest in him. And when he told me the history of it it seemed thoroughly consistent with my high estimate of his energy, all except the last part of the story, and that, as you will see, I managed to bring into line with the rest.

It seems that when Pierce was not a young man yet, but only a boy, Morgan, whose business occasioned him to be a wanderer over all the United States, made the acquaintance of the Pierce family in Philadelphia, took a fancy to young George and proposed to 'make a man of him.'

George was to be made into a man simply by accompanying Mr Morgan in his wanderings and picking up the ways of the world, particularly the business ways, in the course of these wanderings.

But while observing all these things with much profit to himself George Pierce more especially studied Mr Morgan, and the more he studied him the more strange it seemed to George that this genial, prosperous man, evidently not the sort of man to prefer his own company, should be still a bachelor at the ripe age of 45.

The thing really puzzled George, and he, in his energetic but prematurely wise fashion, set about trying to find the reason of it.

'I see you can't make me out, George,' Morgan said to him one day, when they were on the cars together. 'You won't be satisfied until I tell you all about it, will you?'

'All about what, Mr Morgan?' said George.

'Why I am an old bachelor at my time of life, obliged to borrow another man's son to keep me company on the road and be my apprentice in the ways of the world.'

'Well, I have wondered a little, I must say.'

'I might as well tell you,' said the older man, and then he paused and seemed to be debating the matter within himself. Then he went on: 'It's a romance, of course. You must have guessed that.'

'No, I didn't,' said Pierce.

'Oh, you never thought of associating romance with the life of a matter of fact old duffer like me, eh?'

'You're not a duffer nor old,' said Pierce.

'Well, if I am, I wasn't always, let me tell you. I wasn't any duffer when I used to go calling on Linda Sherwood three evenings a week. That was 23 years ago. How old was I?'

'You were 25,' said George promptly.

'Correct. You are quick at figures, my boy. I was 25, and she was only 17. That was what began the trouble. Her parents said she was too young to think of marrying. That was what began it, but it was only the beginning.'

'The next thing was that she took a sudden strong fit of wanting to make herself 'independent,' as she called it. She told me I must not come so often to see her, because she had to study hard to fit herself to earn a living as a teacher. That was what her parents wanted her to do, and that is what she is doing now. It seems a pity.'

'Well?' said Pierce, beginning to be deeply interested.

'Well, it hurt me dreadfully But when after cutting me down to two visits a week she cut me down to one, I got mad. I told her that, if she preferred it, I would stay away altogether. Then she flared up, and that was the end to it.

'And yet, do you know, I really loved that girl. And the remarkable thing about it is I never loved any other. I vowed that if I couldn't marry her I would marry no one else. And so I am an old bachelor. Now, what do you think of my romance?'

'I think it's nonsense,' said George, in a brusque, downright manner, which generally pleased his older friend.

'What?' said Morgan. 'Is that all the thanks I get for telling you my secret?'

'No,' said Pierce, quite unabashed, 'that isn't all, and you haven't told me all yet. I want to know whether you never wanted to marry any other girl.'

'Didn't I tell you I never had loved any other?'

'Yes, but didn't you ever want to love any other?'

'Oh, you split hairs. No, I never even wanted to.'

'And what did she do? Marry somebody else?'

'No, I believe not. She left the town where we were both born and reared and went to a normal school. Then she went to teach school in Boston.'

'And she is teaching school in Boston now?'

'I believe so. Why do you ask?'

'Well, you see, Mr Morgan, you started out to tell me your story, and I want to be sure I get it all straight. You said her name was Linda Sherwood?'

Pierce says that he went to work with the single purpose of making his friend happy. The romance in Morgan's life looked to him like a piece of utter nonsense—'rot,' he called it in telling me about it. He made up his mind in five minutes to put a properly happy ending to this romance.

This is why I said that, for the most part, Pierce's story seemed to me perfectly consistent with what I knew by experience of his character. He is a strenuous young man now and very likely was a strenuous youth six years ago, when he was 18. Being also wary, he talked no more with Morgan about his romance on that journey.

But when the trip was over and Pierce back in the bosom of his family he surprised them by announcing that it would be necessary for him to make a trip on his own account, and alone. They were by this time accustomed to regard him as a licensed wanderer. So Pierce set out for Boston.

I need hardly say that it took him less than no time to find first the school where Miss Sherwood taught and then Miss Sherwood's home address, although there are many schools and female teachers in Boston. The latter part of his mission he performed by the simple and direct method of calling upon the superintendent. And the superintendent, in answering Pierce's urgent and probably hasty inquiry, made a mistake.

'I went to the address that very evening,' says Pierce, 'and when I sent in my card everybody in the house was going down to dinner, or supper, or something. But I wouldn't put off the interview—sent word that I was pressed for time.

'Of course,' he said, 'I had got ready a nice little speech. But when she came in and said, 'I am Miss Sherwood,' I seemed to lose my head for the moment. I couldn't understand how this girl—oh, she was so young and so pretty!—could have been 17 twenty years before.

'At last I got started. I said: 'Miss Sherwood, I have taken the liberty of calling about a matter that concerns the happiness of a very dear friend of mine.'

'By that time I was fairly started. I went on at a great rate; 'I believe you were separated from the man who loved you dearly 20 years ago.' And she went off into a fit of giggling that threw cold water on all I had to say.

'Then there was a pause.

'Then she said, 'Would you mind telling me the name of the gentleman?'

'I said, 'I should have thought you would at least have remembered his name—Morgan.'

''Oh, yes,' she said, and she had hard work to keep down another fit of giggling. 'You want my aunt, the principal out at Brookline.'

'You see, she evidently knew all about the story. I wasn't going to be feazed by a little mistake like that,' Pierce went on. 'I made her give me her aunt's address and went to see her. Both of them had the same given name, you see, and the superintendent had given me the wrong one.'

'And you finally settled it?' I asked Pierce when he had brought the story to this point.

'Yes, of course,' he said. 'That's how the Morgans got married, you know.'

'Of course,' I said. 'And what about the other Linda Sherwood—the wrong one?'

'Well, now,' said Pierce, 'to be quite candid, that was really why I told you the story from the beginning. She was at the wedding; so was I, of course. She was maid of honor. I thought that, considering all the circumstances, she ought to have treated me in a friendly way. Don't you? But she made fun of me.'

'What did she do? Tell them about the mistake you made?

'She got off the whole thing like a regular parlor entertainment. She gave them the opening of that confounded speech of mine, word for word. It made me so mad that I swore I would never speak to her again.'

'Well, you never have, have you?'

'Never.'

'That's all right,' I said. She is not less than 800 miles away, so you needn't trouble yourself about her She won't come out here to make game of you.'

'No' but'—

'What?'

'Well,' said the astute and energetic Pierce, smiling rather sheepishly, I thought—you see, Mrs Morgan has been telling me that there are rumors of her niece being engaged to marry some fellow there—in Boston.'

'I see,' I said. 'And you are afraid she will get off your speech for his amusement.'

'Bosh! Don't you see, I'm in love with her myself!'

'Oh! I said. 'Well, if that's it, Pierce, you needn't expect me to travel 800 miles to do for you what you did for Morgan. There might be another super-

A. HENDERSON'S FURNITURE WAREROOMS
IS THE PLACE.
Queen St., Woodstock, N. B.
May 3, 1899.

The athletic woman is the woman of the day. The past twenty years has seen wonderful progress in this respect. That this tendency will result in a more robust womanhood, better able to bear the burdens and duties and pleasures of life, there can be no question. But this result will be accomplished by the building up of those women already in reasonably robust health, and the killing off of their weaker sisters. Athletics will make a naturally strong woman stronger and healthier; they will make a naturally weak, sickly woman weaker and more sickly, and if indulged in to excess, may result fatally.

A woman who suffers from weakness and disease of the delicate and important organs distinctly feminine, cannot hope to recover her general health through athletics, so long as she remains locally weak. A woman suffering in this way is unfitted to bear the strain of athletics just as much as she is unfitted to bear the duties and burdens of wifehood and motherhood. There is a sure, safe, speedy and permanent cure for all disorders of this description. It is Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription. It acts directly on the organs concerned in wifehood and maternity, making them strong and healthy and vigorous. It soothes pain, allays inflammation, heals ulceration and tones the nerves. It fits a woman to indulge in, and be benefited by, athletics. All good medicine stores sell it.

"Your valuable 'Favorite Prescription' cured me of female weakness and a catarrhal discharge from the lining membrane of the special parts," writes Mrs. T. H. Parker, of Brooklyn, Jackson Co., Mich. "I am now perfectly well."

Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Pellets cure constipation. Constipation is the cause of many diseases. Cure the cause and you cure the disease. One "Pellet" is a gentle laxative, and two a mild cathartic. Druggists sell them, and nothing is "just as good."

When the doctor gives one up, most people lose heart, but it was not this way with the young society woman in a western Ontario city who had contracted kidney trouble through lack of care in "wrapping up" after an evening's round of pleasure. She heard of South American Kidney Cure and pinned her faith to it to cure her and in an incredibly short time felt her health returning. Her suffering ebbed and three months from the day her physician hinted her case was hopeless, she presented herself to him a cured woman.

The principles of teetotalism appear to be making way steadily in Scotland, notwithstanding the enormous waste of expenditure which still goes on in intoxicating drinks among the working classes.

Dr. A. W. CHASE
DISCOVERED A NEW TREATMENT FOR NERVOUS DISEASES

In his study of diseases of the nerves, Dr. A. W. Chase found that in nearly every case the cause of trouble was improper nourishment. About one-fifth of all the blood in the human body is found in the brain, and unless this blood is rich and pure the nerves cannot obtain proper nourishment, and become worn out and exhausted.

Nervous depression, nervous headache, nervous dyspepsia, loss of sleep and vital force, lack of energy, are symptoms of weak, watery blood and exhausted nerves.

It was as a food for blood and nerves that Dr. A. W. Chase's Nerve Food was prepared. Its remarkable success in curing all diseases arising from thin blood and impoverished nerves is proof that Dr. Chase's theory of feeding the nerves and blood is the proper one; stimulants only urge on the tired and worn out nervous system until there comes a complete collapse.

Dr. A. W. Chase's Nerve Food creates new brain and nerve cells, and makes the blood pure and rich. It restores to the exhausted nerves the vigor of perfect health. 50c. a box, at all dealers, or Edmanson, Bates & Co., Toronto.

OUR MOTTO.

If God be for us, who can be against us?

OUR PERSUASION.

That temperance is the moderate use of all things helpful, and total abstinence from all things harmful.

OUR FAITH.

That as God lives, right the day shall win.

'The wicked flee when no man pursueth,' but, as has been aptly added, they go a good deal faster when somebody is after them. The truth of this is being very practically demonstrated just now in Chicago by the work of the Law Enforcement League. Rev J Q A Henry is president of this organization which is becoming such a terror to evil-doers. Its avowed object is 'to have the laws and ordinances against the disorderly saloon and other immoral resorts faithfully and fearlessly executed.' The League is only four months old, but during that time it has received information concerning more than one thousand places of vice and crime in the city, about one-half of which have been personally investigated, and reported upon to the officers of the society. In the four months of its history it has begun prosecutions in the courts of more than 250 cases, and has the very honorable record of not losing a single case for want of efficiency on the part of its representatives. The cases investigated cover every phase of vice and crime from that which is most aristocratic and fashionable down to that which is most loathsome and diabolical. In response to invitations sent by the League to some seven hundred different churches and societies, a 'Christian Convention' was held in Central Music Hall on March 3, for the purpose of discussing the moral issues involved in the coming municipal campaign. The meetings were well attended and enthusiastic, and evidently meant act sentiment but business.

Zigzagging.

'The poor dog is tired out,' said Mary, as the wagon drove into the yard and Towser, covered with the dust of the road, dropped lolling and panting on the green grass.

'Tain't the journey he had to take that's tired him,' laughed the farmer. 'He's used himself up by zigzagging from one side of the road to the other and tendin' to everything that didn't concern him. He couldn't pass a gate without runnin' through to see what was on the other side, nor see a hen anywhere along the road without feelin' called on to chase her. Every dog that barked started him to barkin', and everything that moved took him out of his way to find out what it was and where it was goin'. No wonder he's tired! But you'll find plenty of human bein's that are travellin' their lives through in just that same way. They ain't satisfied with the bit of road that's marked out for their own feet, but they try to oversee all their neighbor's goin's and doin's, and take charge of no end of things that they can't either help or hinder. They're like old Towser; it wears 'em all out. If they'd follow straight after the Master, and not invent so many extra cares for themselves, the way wouldn't be nigh so long nor hard.'

One Cigar a Day.

'How can you afford all these books?' asked a young man calling upon a friend; 'I can't seem to find spare change for even the leading magazines.'

'Oh, that library is only my one cigar a day,' was the reply.

'What do you mean?' inquired the visitor.

'Mean? Just this: When you advised me to indulge in an occasional cigar several years ago I had been reading about a young fellow who bought books with the money that others would have burned in cigars, and I thought I would try and do the same. You may remember that I said I should allow myself one cigar a day?'

'Yes, I recall the conversation, but don't quite see the connection.'

'Well, I never smoked, but I put by the price of a five cent cigar every day; and as the money accumulated, I bought books—the very books you see.'

'You don't mean to say that your books cost no more than that! Why there are dollars' worth of them!'

'Yes, I know there are. I had six years more of my apprenticeship to serve when you advised me 'to be a man.' I put by the money, which, at five cents a day, amounted to $18.25 a year, or $109.50 in six years. I keep these books by themselves as the result of my apprenticeship cigar money; and if you had done as I did, you would, by this time, have saved many, many more dollars than I have, and you would have been better off in health and self-respect besides.'—Success

What Empire Day Signified.

In an oration at Montreal Hon Geo. R Foster said:—

Empire Day meant the progress of the Anglo-Saxon people. It meant the welding together of the vast dependences. It meant the peace, freedom and security of the wide world. There were 400,000,000 people who owe allegiance to the Queen of England and Empress of India. In all these lands they sing the same national hymn that was rendered by the school children of Montreal, while the same flag waves over us all. There could be no home without parents, there could be no school without a teacher and there could be no Empire without a head.

The Star says:—

In every school house throughout Canada the 23rd of May will probably hereafter be devoted to patriotic songs and exercises in honor of the Empire. The idea of an Empire Day in the Schools was suggested by Mrs Fessenden, of Hamilton, to whom much credit is due, and Hon Geo W Ross, who has on more than one occasion shown a patriotic Canadian spirit, proposed to the convention of Canadian teachers at Halifax last summer that the plan should be adopted in all the schools of Canada. The proposal was strongly approved by all the teachers present and the custom is likely to become firmly established in all the provinces of the Dominion.

Supply of Pulp Wood.

One of our exchanges draws attention to the fact that the paper manufacturers of the United States contemplate the invasion of Canada and notably of New Brunswick. Hitherto the State of Maine has been a favorite region for the manufacture of paper pulp from spruce, but the supply there is becoming unequal to the demand. Unless some substitute for spruce is discovered in making common news print, the spruce forests of this province are certain within a few years to become increasingly valuable. Five years from now, an alarmist declares, the spruce supply of the United States will be absolutely exhausted. In Maine on the Androscoggin river alone, the pulp mills need 250,000,000 feet of spruce logs annually, and in four years it is declared will exhaust the entire supply in contiguous territory. In Northern Maine there is still a small supply, and the lands are being rapidly bought up. New Brunswick is admittedly one of the very few remaining extensive areas in which pulp wood can be obtained, and it will soon become a serious question as to whether steps should not be taken to guard against the spendthrift policy of complete destruction which has ruined the sources of supply in the United States.—Fiton Farmer.
