The auditor on submitting his report said that the councillors were conversant with the work done by the collectors the past year. It had been proposed to place the de-linquent lists alongside this year's assessment in a column for the purpose in the assessors' books, but on consultation with the Clerk of the Peace, he was informed that each year's tax had to be kept separate. He had been going over the old delinquent lists and had found some of them in very bad shape; he thought, on the whole, the collectors had done very well to make as good returns as they had. He had requested the collectors to furnish him with a list of the accounts that could not be collected. The wild land and the pound tax were the items the taxpayers generally refused to pay; he had never audited the wild land tax because he was nothing in the returns to show that the poor tax had been collected. The list and the precept very seldom agreed. Some assessors added the 10 per cent before they made the division, and that brought the amount to a good deal more than the pre-cept called for. Now the amount collected for wild land tax does not appear in the list at all. The assessment should be paid to the highway commissioner and he should make his return; they should receive their
