SIR JASPER'S GENEREROSITY

The band was playing 'A Summer Night in Munich, Out on the terrace colored lights hung like globes of fire and seats, cunningly placed in secluded corners, invited repose to the dancers, There in the quivering moonlight stood Rosemary Maitland. Her companion looked at the sweet face half turned away from him. Presently he spoke. 'It may be a long, long time,' he said the PAINLESS EXTRACTION softly. And the music died away into a distant echo-it seemed of pain, 'Will you spare a thought for me sometimes?'

'I shall often think of you,' she anwered simply. 'Will you give me a flower?' he said and turned to the flower border, filled with quaint, old-fashioned plants-laven-
