Poetry.
In Memory
Of a Newburg boy, Michael Tracey, who enlisted on July 4th, 1899, in the Twenty-sixth regiment, U.S.V.; and who, in Nov. 1899, with two comrades, Dennis Hayes and Wm. Dagan, was killed in the far away Philippines.
Far from home across the ocean Fate from home and loved ones here, Fell a brave boy by insurgent,
As he lingered in the rear With two comrades, while on march In the distant Philippines; Oh! the cruel death they suffered Far more sad than battle scenes, 'Twas in the spring of '98, Two brothers Mike and Dan, Left home to spend a year or two Where at Lawrence young Mike enlisted For a lead that was a lie, Caused him many a sobbing hour And many a sad and lonely day It was not in the battle's van This brave young soldier fell, As did some bold Canadian boys 'Way down in the Philippines;
By the hands of native foes That Philippines land,
He met death in Balingue Where they slayed; Ah! fatal end.
How little his dear mother thought, Whose grave, four years ago Was made in our country churchyard For a lad that was a lie, 'Neath the drifting, falling snow, That of her son she loved so well, One brief hour now would be Without a stone to mark his grave Far away near the China sea.
Just in the bloom of manhood; Nineteen just a few months before, He left his home for New York, And thence to that far off shore,
To battle with the natives.
For those islands in the sea;
On whose shores now this Newburg boy Resteth till Eternity.
And all ye parents who have sons Can sympathize free; Moth and all those who know the babe While on its mother's knee;
And as the loved ones look the shore, They'll seem to bring a strain From the distant land, He'll never see again. —S. A. McG.

Select Tale.
A TRANSFER AT GETTYSBURG.
The steamer from Newbern, that carried the wagon-train of which Jim Wright had charge, proceeded directly to Baltimore. At this place all of the officer's baggage and the camp equipage of the 76th regiment were unceremoniously dumped out. The wagons were then reloaded with ammunition, placed with the mules on the cars and rushed to the front.
It was late in the afternoon of July second when Jim's wagons reached the vicinity of Gettysburg. All day he had heard the sound of cannon, and toward noon had met streams of wounded soldiers, and the prisoners under guard.
New officers were continually hurrying the trains forward, and as Jim's teams were in excellent condition, his train was in advance of the others. He could hear musketry rattling furiously on beyond the hills on the left side of the Taneytown road, when a staff officer came galloping up to the wagons.
'What have you in those wagons?' he demanded.

'Ammunition, sir; R. B. cartridges, calibre .58,' answered Jim, promptly.
'Good! Get those wagons up to the front as quickly as possible! Kill their team if necessary, but get there! The left of our line is being flanked, and the men are nearly out of ammunition.
Hurry for God's sake, hurry!'
'Show me where to go, captain, and I'll shove those wagons there as quick as my mules can take them,' answered Jim.
'Come on!' The officer dashed ahead.

'I'll show you,' the foremost driver, lashed his mules into a run, and the others came galloping after, flanking a high, round hill with a smaller one beyond it, which hid the battlefield from the train, although the white smoke showed the position of the conflict. The captain led Jim's train off from the main road, up a spur of the smaller mountain, and then, looking down the side of the steep hill and out into the field beyond, Jim and Sam saw the Union line. Flashes and puffs of smoke beyond that marked the enemy's position.
A division of regulars was retiring slowly; on their left one battered brigade was stretched out in single rank, with their left flank 'refused,' or bent back like a door on a hinge.
'O Lord, we are too late! The enemy are on our road!' shouted the officer, in dismay.
'Captain,' said Jim scanning the ground, 'I can take a wagon down that hill, across that wheat-field, swing to the left, and give those boys ammunition.'
'If you could you might as well be the whole army. Can you?' the captain cried.
The feat seemed impossible. The hill seemed too steep. The likelihood that the wagons would overturn the team and be upside down, and the whole load lost, was very great. Once at the bottom, however, the teamster would be all right.
'I can tie a couple of dead mules to the hind end of the wagon, and they will act as brakes. I'll let wagons down gulches worse than this,' said Jim, confidently.
'But where are your dead mules?'
'Here, captain,' and Jim pointed to the leaders of a team. 'I'll tie them on behind the wagon, and, touching his pistol, 'when those boys ammunition.'
'If you could you might as well be the whole army. Can you?' the captain cried.

talk! I haven't killed yet, by any means, and I hope we won't be.
Then Jim, having pointed out the course he wished the negro to take, tied the two mules doomed to serve as brakes to the rear of the wagon, and stripped off the canvas cover. During these preparations, which occupied only a few minutes' time, Sam dismounted, and was patting the mules and calling each by name: 'Minky, Junny, good lily gal! To Bill, yo' long-eared rascal! Member ole Sam's a-dribbing yo', and similar words to all six of them.
'Come on!' yelled the officer.
Sam leaped into the saddle, cracked his whip, and shouted, 'Git—yo—all!' and the wagon started.
It was but a short distance to the summit; then came a steep, rough descent to the rolling field where the Union line was fighting. As they reached the crest, Jim looked back and saw the shining glow of musket barrels coming up the Taneytown road.
'That's the Sixth Corps!' cried the officer. 'But oh, how slow they are!'
The troops were coming on the run!
Now Jim's revolver cracked twice, and the two mules fell, shot through the head.
Away the wagon went, plunging, bump-ing, crashing down the hill—no vehicle but an army wagon could have stood that jolting and even the army wagon, stable as it was, would have been sent to pieces had not its spoked wheels checked and its course checked by Jim's ingenious brake. At the base of the hill Jim's keen eyes saw the halting of the dead mules without slackening the speed of the team, and the wagon went flying toward the blue line.
The hissing, humming bullets were everywhere; splinters flew from the wagonbody, but on its speed; with a shriek Jim sprang from the saddle and ran beside the team, shouting at the mules, and soon the wagon was in the rear of the foremost of the battle.
Back from the firing-line the sergeants came running, and eagerly seized the pine boxes of cartridges. A mule went down; his harness was quickly cut, and the wagon rolled on. The captain's horse was shot under him; he fell with it, and Jim and Sam saw him no more.
At the next halt, soldiers with powder-blackened lips, bloodshot eyes and ashen faces were round them, yelling 'Cartridges! cartridges! cartridges!' and more of the pine boxes were quickly pitched out and smashed, and the brown paper packages, ten cartridges in each, distributed to the men.
'Pass the word for the boys to hold on hard a little longer—the Sixth Corps is coming on the double-quick, and is almost here!' shouted Jim, as he gave out the ammunition.
'They'll have to come mighty soon, or they'll be too late. More than half of our men have gone down, and the rest of them can't last but a few minutes longer,' said a sergeant, wearing on his cap the red Maltese cross of the Fifth Corps.
The leading mules had been shot down already; only three remained under guard.
Jim saw the wagon to the fighting left, Sam holding the leader by the head.
The men in the battle-line of the 'refused' flank were in single rank—a thin line, threatening to break, and their officers were bringing them down the left side of the box of the dead and wounded; for many a form in blue lay still, and more lay writhing on the red ground. The
