Poetry. New Every Morning

Every day is a fresh beginning, Every morn is the world made new: Ye who are weary of sorrow and suffering Here is a beau iful hope for you-A hope for me and a hope for you.

All the past things are past and over, The tasks are done and the tears are shed; Yesterday's errors let yesterday cover, Yesterday's wounds which smarted an

God, in his wisdom, receive, forgive them Only the new days are our own. To-day is ours, and to-day slone. Here are the skies all burnished brightly,

Here is the spent earth all reborn; Here are the tired limbs springing lightly To face the sun and to share with the mor In the chrism of dew and the cool of dawn

Every day is a fresh beginning, Listen, my soul, to the glad refrain, And, in spite of old sorrow and older sinning And puzzles forecasted and possible pain, Take heart with the day and begin again

SHE TRIED TO BE TRUE

Although the little village of Olden was beginning to look bright with the green of early spring, down here by the cove all was gray—sand, rocks, sky, even the water had the same dreary tint—not a gleam of other color, except that of the crimson shawl which the girl, sitting on a The subscriber having become proprietor of the McAdam Junction Restaurant will maintain and ledge of rock, had wrapped around her. Laurence Dare, coming along the road which ran above the beach, saw the patch of red and paused. 'That is Monica,' he muttered. He made a few long strides and stood beside her.

'Monica,' he said softly. The girl turned her head with a quick

'Oh, Laurence!' There was a displeased tone in her voice and her brows came together in a frown as she regarded him 'Monica, you are cruel.'

The girl made no answer. 'Monica, last summer you gave me a faint hope that in time you would listen What have you to say to me

She turned around to him, her eyes 'I was wrong to let you think you might hope. Laurence, for I can't do as vou wish. Don't vou understand? It seems wrong for me to listen to you. Think; I belong to Allen. I was to have been his wife. He was always talking of Cousin Laurence. You seemed Cousin Laurence to me too. Don't you see? I

She went along swiftly until she knew that she was out of view from the cove. Her thoughts were in a whirl. Why should she not yield? She knew that her happiness would be secure with this strong, tender man, How little he guessed her struggle to resist his pleading He thought she did not care. In the old days she had compared Allen with him, and always to the former's disadvantage. For after the first glamour of their engagement she had seen the shallowness and seifishness of Allen's nature, and in the close relations into which through her engagement she was brought with Allen's cousin Laurence she had recogthe latter.

And these last years how the tenderness of his nature had shown out! What care he had given to Allen's desolate mother! He had almost filled the place him had been only a strong admiration. In spite of her recognition of Allen's weak nature, the fasgination of his glance and soft voice had held her a captive. But now! When Allen had gone wes on the prospecting tour, which was to occupy ten months, she had promised to be ready to marry him upon his re turn. But the ten months had passed, and other months had grown into years, and he had not returned. They had no news of him after that last letter, written seven months from his departure Laurence had employed every means at his command to find some trace of him, but in vain. He appeared to have vanished utterly. The only reasonable solution of the mystery was that he was dead, His mother believed it, but Monica did not. She could not. She had promised to wait for him.
