dailies of the Dominion, thinks that the best way for Great Britain to meet the increasing competition of the United States and Germany is to material from the United States the manufacturers of Great Britain, it says, ought to extend their operations to Canada and make these products here themselves. This same idea is being suggested in Great Britain itself. A correspondent of the London Daily Chronicle makes exactly the same suggestions as have appeared in the Toronto World. He writes:

"Referring to Lord Rosebery's speech at Wolverhampton, there is some way in which we can fight American competition, and that is through Canada. Let English people riddly themselves of the mistaken idea that Canada is an agricultural country only whose destiny is to supply raw material and food staples to the United States and Great Britain, and to receive in return the manufactures of these countries. The successful development in the past few years of nearly every branch of manufactures in Ontario and Quebec is almost inclose proximity to deep water harbors, coal, iron, dolimite and limestone, a condition of things which does not exist in the United States, to the magnificent system of inland a hard garden the States for the Facilic and Atlantic coasts, in close proximity to deep water harbors, coal, iron, dolimite and limestone, a condition of things which does not exist in the United States, to the magnificent system of inland a hard garden the same machinery that is used south of the boundary line, but he world. Britain is, after all, nonly a small portion of the Empire. When Empire, when the same machinery that is used south of the world, and have several points in their favor to start with." These resources were never properly placed before British capitalists, otherwise they would not have sought the United States for investment of the states of investment in the United States for investment of the states of investment in the United States for investment of the states of investment in the United States for investment i
