A CORPSE OWNS ITSELF.

REPOSE OF THE DEAD IS GUARANTEED BY COMMON LAW.

Even when a man is dead the law pursues him. While his heirs are trying to break his will in one court his body may be the subject of litigation in another. Death severs a man from all his earthly possessions except his body—that still belongs to him and to no one else. It is a maxim of the common law that there can be no property in a corpse—that is, that no one living can own it; the corpse owns itself. Unfortunately, there are obstacles to a corpse arguing its own case, so the law does it for the body of the dead person. The law takes no cognizance of ghosts, materialized spirits, etc. When a man is dead, the law says that he shall stay dead. His apparition has no standing in court, though his body has.

One of the duties of the common law is to protect "the repose of the dead." It is held by the law that the corpse, being the owner of itself before it becomes dead, possesses certain rights over the remains when it becomes a corpse. A person has the right orally or by will to direct what shall be done with his body after death. If these wishes are complied with, no "next of kin" can interfere and claim the body. The only difficulty is that if a person is eccentric his heirs or friends may not follow out his wishes, and then there does not seem to be any remedy. The corpse can't kick, and nobody else seems to have a right to.

One inalienable right belongs to the corpse, and the law will enforce that right. It is the right to six feet of ground to be buried in and the right of being buried. The common law, under certain conditions, places the duty of burying a corpse upon the person under whose roof the death took place. Such person not only must provide the grave, but must carry the body to it, "decently covered." If there is a will or property, however, the law first places the duty of burying the body upon the executor or administrator, and in the absence of a will, upon the next of kin. But if no next of kin or no administrator or executor is at hand the owner of the house, in which the person dies, is charged with the duty.

The law gives no civil remedy for the stealing of a body, for there is no property right in a corpse to give any one a right to recover in a court for violation of sepulture. The only party to such a suit would be the corpse itself, which is usually not litigious. Stealing a dead body, therefore, has always been indictable as a statutory misdemeanor and not a violation of property. But a civil action may be brought for breaking and entering the place where the body is buried the same constituting a trespass, for which damages can be recovered. So also an action may be brought to recover the shroud and coffin, but not the corpse.

In cases regarding the removal of a body the law often has to interfere to protect the rights of the corpse. Such cases are decided by courts of equity. As no one can own a body except his own, so no one has a right to move a body from one grave to another unless the court grants permission, which is granted, when it is granted, presumably in behalf of the body itself.

Novel Ammunition.

During the sieges of medieval times, it was very common for the beleaguers to throw from their catapults and other military engines dead bodies of dogs, swine, together with pieces of horseflesh, and similar carrion, into the city or castle besieged, in order that the defenders might, by the stench of this putridity be forced to a surrender.

Woman's Priceless Pearl

The greatest menace to happiness is her health. The greatest menace to her health is Kidney Disease. Mrs. Young says South American Kidney Cure is a "priceless pearl." So it is.

Mrs. A. E. Young, Barnston, Que., says: "It is seven months since I took my last dose of South American Kidney Cure and I have not had the slightest symptom of the aggravating Kidney trouble from which I suffered so many years. I paid doctors a small fortune without any permanent results. This great remedy is a 'priceless pearl' for women suffering as I did." It relieves in six hours.

Technical Education in Germany.

At all the great centres of manufacturing industry in Germany special attention is given in the elementary technical schools to each separate branch; while in agricultural or mining districts the training connected with these pursuits is made prominent, as a matter of course. Workshops are attached where apprentices and even masters' assistants can improve their practical knowledge of the various handicrafts; and girls' schools are provided to teach sewing, knitting, dressmaking, millinery, laundry and dairy work, cooking, fruit preserving, as well as orthography, book-keeping, shorthand, typewriting, etc. In the smaller villages, where no agricultural or technical schools exist, itinerant teachers attend regularly at stated times. Success pre-eminently depends on the fitness of the members of the teaching staff, who should not be mere theorists, but men and women in whom pedagogic aptitude is blended with sound practical knowledge and experience. It is obvious that such teachers are difficult to procure, and the German Government deserves great credit for the mastery with which they have solved the problem. No expense has been spared to render the training seminaries thoroughly efficient, and great care is taken to select the most suitable individual for each particular appointment. Promotion can only be obtained by merit, liberal pensions are granted and teachers are so well paid and occupy so high a social position that some of the best elements of the nation are attracted to the ranks of the profession.

COVERED WITH ECZEMA

The good sisters of St. Joseph's Infant's Home say of Dr. Agnew's Ointment—"We give it our highest recommendation. We use it freely and find it a great cure."

The British Wood Market.

(Farnworth & Jardine's circular.)

The arrivals from British North America, during the past month, have been 36,160 tons register, against 62,505 tons register during the corresponding month last year, and the aggregate tonnage to this date from all places during the years 1899, 1900 and 1901 has been 335,432, 350,741 and 304,368 tons respectively.

The business of the past month has been quiet; imports generally have shown a marked falling off in comparison with the same month last year, the deliveries having been fair and stocks are reduced to a moderate compass, but there is little change in values to report. Ocean freights are depressed and rule very low.

New Brunswick and Nova Scotia spruce and pine deals—As compared with the corresponding month last year the import shows a marked decline, viz., 13,800, against 27,700 standards, and as the deliveries have more than kept pace the stock has been considerably reduced, though still sufficient. Latest sales have shown some improvement; freights continue very low. Pine deals are in fair demand; stocks small.

Birch—Of logs there has been a small import, chiefly from Halifax; the deliveries have been fair, stocks are fairly moderate, and for fresh wood prices show a little improvement. Of planks there has practically been no import; the consumption has been fair, but stocks are still too large and values are low.

Fighting for Fighting's Sake.

History records that, some two centuries ago, in an engagement between English and Danish ships the latter, when its ammunition was exhausted, sent over to borrow some from the English vessel in order that the battle might go on. This, according to the Springfield Republican, was outdone by the Maoris of New Zealand when resisting conquest by Britain half a century ago. The Maoris, says the Republican, were so brave in war, and so deeply loved to expose themselves to the dangers of physical combat, that, in one of their battles with the British, when the white soldiers had ceased firing because their ammunition had run short, the Maori chieftain sent to them a fresh supply of cartridges, under a flag of truce, to enable his adversaries to continue fighting. On another occasion a Maori chieftain was asked why he had not cut off the supplies of a British column, as he could easily have done. The old warrior laughed contemptuously. "How could the British go on fighting us," he exclaimed, "if we prevented them from getting food?"

Hampored by his Position.

The contention is made that the Duke of York, if his visit is to yield the greatest possible interest and instruction, ought to see those things that are characteristic of the country. The difficulty is, that those things are not, as a rule, to be found in the cities and towns where the greatest efforts will be made to provide spectacles. A private individual, desirous of studying the country, would not spend the greater part of his time in Montreal, Toronto and Winnipeg. He would strike off into the woods and mining regions, into the new settlements of Ontario and the west, and try to form a notion of the extent and resources of the country and the progress of their development. The Duke may do this to a certain extent, but he cannot avoid a certain amount of ceremonial, which will take up a large part of the time that would otherwise be devoted to observation. He will come too late to see the western fields, yellow with the harvest, which is one of the sights of Canada. Still, we believe, he will take back to England a fair idea of the extent of this part of the British Empire and of the contentment of its people.—Toronto Globe.

A Canadian "Clearing."

One can never realize what work and difficulties had to be faced by the earliest pioneers in Canada until one has ocular evidence of what it means to make a "clearing." I saw a specimen of work of the kind in the woods adjoining Killdeer Lake, on Lake Joseph, yesterday, and I think I shall always appreciate the real hard labor involved much more thoroughly when I see trim, smooth paths, edged with large boulders, running through the pretty open woods, such as may be seen on several of the islands here. The big boulders and rocks, the tangle of underbrush, the thick growth of small birches and of other trees make such an undertaking seem well-nigh hopeless as one views a place of the kind in advance. No wonder that many of the boys and men return to town with muscles well developed and appetites unusually keen when they have spent part of the Muskoka holiday in this necessary work. The improvement effected in the end, however, is quite well worth the efforts expended.—Lally Bernard, in the Globe.
