Shorty's Celebration.

Shorty McGovern was what is known in certain circles as "a second story man." His friends respected him for his undeniable ability for getting and, what was really quite as important, for getting

The police respected him, but principally for the latter gift.

Shorty respected himself sometimes, but not often. After a particularly good piece of work, when his finances would permit, Shorty gave himself up to a period of dull | the plumpness of health. respectability, a proceeding rather foreign to the disposition of a "second story man." For days he would keep to his room, reading voraciously every book upon which he could lay his hands. Dickens was his favorite author, and he loved stories of children.

Shorty was fond of children and never disturbed them more than was necessary when engaged in hi business.

It was when his finances thus permitted him to rest and dip into literature that Shorty came nearest to respecting himself, but unfortunately there always came a day when he was forced to sally forth and again become the hunter and the hunted, usually the central figure, though unknown, in items of various length in the newspapers.

The residence section of the city was invariably the field of his efforts. A day's stroll would disclose the opportunity, and then night and a few necessary impliments of trade enabled him to do the rest. As he walked briskly up the avenue this winter afternoon nothing in Shorty's appearance would attract particular attention. Here was a basement window unguarded by the usual iron frame; there a balcony gave promise of shelter from passing eyes while the window was being forced. At the corner Shorty passed a church. He had no designs on the church, but the swell of the organ and the sound of children's voices came to him through a half open window. They were devoting all their energies to the last verse of the carol:

Ring the joy bells over all the earth, Stealing, pealing, let them tell his birth. Angel music, let it sweetly fall,

> Again came the cry from behind dren's offering!"

A struggle was going on in the soul of Shorty. Something, he knew not what, surged in his breast.

The aged rector stood in the aisle as near the burning tree as the heat would permit. The last of the children had been led safely through engines sounded far down the street and the clang of the fire gongs.

The rector sprang forward and dragged him away from the shower of sparks which followed his fall. It was the disreputable Shorty who looked up into the rector's face.

"Unbotton me coat!" he gasped. The rector obeyed and with an extree at the church after exhausting clamation of surprise caught the silver plate. He lifted it wonderingly, and Shorty struggled to his feet.

"Feel in me pockets. Me hands is burnt." The rector hurriedly pulled the avenue, but the vestry door was forth the envelopes and started to

LUST OF BLOOD.

That life is cheap and civilization only a veneer, beneath which lurk the instincts of savagery, has been made manifest by the long and sanguinary struggles in both . South Africa and the Philippine Islands. Once the lust of blood is aroused, as it has been in those unfortunate countries, it is hard to induce men to lay down their arms or forego the savage freedom of war. Peace, however, is evidently nearer at hand in South Africa than in the Philippines, and while it is to be hoped Uncle Sam may find some way of putting a stop to the barbarous warfare that has cost so much life and property, the situation will not be without a grim humor if he is compelled to go on struggling awkwardly with a primitive foe after John Bull shall have concluded the great white man's war he has had on his hands for a much shorter period of time. laugh on "the old man" that they will not look very comfortable if the tables are turned and the laugh is on In the Philippines, the trial by

Mr. Laforest and Mr. Flemming, M. P. P.'s.

A few weeks ago it was stated in the Moniteur Acadian that Mrs, La-Forest, wife of Mr. Fred. LaForest, M. P. P., had come into possession of $80,000 through the will of a relative in the Western States, whose death was recorded some months ago. Mr and Mrs LaForest went West to look after their interests, and now a report comes from Edmundston that Mr LaForest is so well pleased with the financial situation there and the prospects, that he is more than liketo remain in the West and establish his home there, and in addition to his financial luck he finds the climate well calculated to upbuild his health. If these reports be true, Mr LaForest will not be a candidate at the next provincial elections,

In this connection it may also be mentioned as a rumor from Carleton that Mr Flemming, M. P. P., is not likely to be a candidate at the next elections. He is said to see more profit in his business than in the political life of the future.—Gleaner.

The Time to Cut Hay.

The aim of our farmers in growing forage crops is to produce from a given area as large a quantity as possible of the digestible nutrients in a palatable form. The time at which a forage crop is harvested may affect the crop in three ways, viz:-in the quantity of material harvested, in the composition of the crop, and in the palatibility of the fodder. As a general rule it has been found that the greatest amount of dry matter is secured where forage crops are allowed to fully mature and ripen. The only exception is in the case of clovers and other legumes, where the leaves rattle off and are lost, either before or during the process of curing.

It does not follow that when a plant increases in its yield of dry matter that its nutritive value has proportionately increased. It is quite possible that changes in texture and composition of the dry substance may offset the greater yield. The dry matter of mature grass contains a larger proportion of crude fibre than the immature. The plant hardens in texture and loses, in both palatibility and digestibility. It is, therefore, usually advisable to begin cutting hay early, and where there is a large crop to be gathered work should begin early in order that it is completed before the grass seeds are ripe enough to shell from the heads of the late cut grass. Chemical analysis has shown that plants are richer in protein in the earlier stages of growth than when fully grown or nearly mature. The chief thing with which our feeders have to contend, is the lack of protein in the rations made up of our common feeding stuffs, and they should recogonize the fact that by cutting early, they can get two crops of before men who are familiar with the highly nitrogenous fodder, where they only get one by late cutting. Cutting the first crop even before the heads are fully grown will tend standards of conduct that obtained to cause a vigorous new growth and in this way a good crop of rowan is

The two crops are more valuable, especially for feeding dairy cows than one mature crop on account of the increased proportion of portein. The early cut hay seems more palatable to stock, and weight for weight, more satisfactory. On the other hand by late cutting we secure a considerably larger quantity of carbo-hydrates, which are valuable for feeding, and of crude fibre which is of low feeding value.

For the Dairy cows and sheep, grass should be cut early, since these animals do not relish hay that is woody and lacking in aroma, as is the case with late cut hay. For horses and fattening cattle later cutting is allowable, as these animals subsist mostly on concentrated feed, and hay serves more for "filling" as horsemen say. In tests made by Professors Sanborn and Henry in fattening steers with early and late cut hay, it was found that late cut panies the chest cold is racking. hav gave the best results. If cutting is delayed too long the stems of . coughing spell strains the whole the grass become tough and stringy system. We feel sure that if we and the seeds scatter from the heads Such hay has little aroma and lacks palatability if not nutrients. Though can hear of, in the shape of median indefinite quantity, the aroma of cine. We take big doses of quinine grass has real value in rendering until the head buzzes and roars; we hay more palatable. When the sun dissipates the dew from the dying grass in the meadow, we detect the escaping aroma, because the dew in rising, carries some of it into the cough, could be stopped, we would get better promptly, and it is because Adamson's Botanic Cough Balsam is should not be remain scattered over so soothing and healing to the in- the field at night. Green colored, sweet smelling hay is really the best and prudent farmers will not oversimple preparation made of extracts look such seemingly small points as of barks and gums of trees, and it preserving the aroma and preventing bleaching.
