Encouragement to Love.

When may a man consider that he is encouraged?

Of course, in answering such a question, you must consider, first, the different characteristics of the separate individuals; but I think, even taking these into account, that there are some general rules which would meet all cases.

For instance, when a girl accepts a man's attentions and his continual hospitality, and openly wears the presents he has sent her, he may certainly begin to believe that he has found favour in her eyes, and that her answer to the momentous question will be a satisfactory one.

For a girl with any self-respect will discourage a man she cannot love at once when she sees in what direction his feelings are tending; knowing she can never reciprocate them, she will refuse his invitations, and thus delicately insinuate that his attentions are not welcome.

Then, again, if the girl appears happy and contented in a man's company, if she greets him with pleasure, and bestows more than half her programme upon him at a dance, he may reasonably trust that her heart is wholly his.

But, then, I think men, as a rule, require a good deal of encouragement before they propose. They prefer to be sure, and are too much afraid of risking a refusal. They do not understand that a bold attack will often succeed where a more timid one would fail. The majority of girls, I should say, like to be 'carried by storm.'

And men are frequently very shy. In spite of an apparent show of easy confidence, they are, as a whole far more self-distrustful than women, and it is this same bashfulness which often costs them dear.

It is said that by far the greater number of proposals, though not actually made by the girl, are helped on in such a way as to make it easier for the man to lay his hand and heart at her feet.

And I do not think the girl is to be blamed for acting so in a case of this sort, for, if she is certain of the man's feelings towards her, it would be a pity if happiness of both their lives should be ruined, only because the man lacks the courage to propose.

Not that I in any way uphold the adoption of the 'leap year privilege' and it is only that I think decided encouragement may be needed on some occasions.

When interviews and conversations grow strained and embarrassing, pauses follow—pauses which the girl appears to be in no hurry to fill up—the man may be certain that her heart is too full for words, and that her indisposition to talk to him on the ordinary topics of the day is a sure sign in his favour.

And then there is not only the girl to be considered, but her parents or guardians as well; and here there is generally no doubt as to 'the way the wind blows'—no glossing over of their real wishes or feelings.—The Welcome.

Horse Raising in Canada a Good Business.

W. S. Spark of Canterbury, Eng. at the Maritime Winter Fair tells of market demands and how to meet them.

Mr. W. S. Spark an English horseman of 30 years experience, who came to Canada as a delegate to the meetings of the Chambers of Commerce of the Empire at Montreal last summer and who has since been interesting himself in the possibility of horse raising in this country was invited to visit our Winter Fairs and talk upon horse breeding. Mr. Spark illustrated his talks with stereopticon views and impressed his audiences not only with his thorough knowledge of his subject but gave a great deal of good advice which, if acted upon will mean millions to this country.

There is to-day, he said, a tremendous demand in the British market for all kinds of good horses and over there we are looking more and more to this country for supplies. Canada on account of her climate, her fodder and her men should be the coming country of the world for horse breeding. To ensure success of course the highest intelligence and skill must be put in to the business.

Our exhibitors, he thought, might encourage our farmers in horse raising by giving more money to brood mares and young stock owned and bred by farmers, for it was only through the farmer that we could get any large number of horses for market, and we must have their co-operation.

The first step in choosing breeding stock was to avoid stallions and mares with hereditary unsoundness such as roaring, whistling, catarrh, curb spavins, side bones laminitis, navicular disease and grease. Always look carefully for these troubles before using either mare or stallion.

Select a deep roomy mare on the best of feet and legs, large flat feet are a sign of weakness, a cup shaped foot with a thick crust and not too large is what is wanted, a sloping pastern, the toes turned neither out nor in and the cannon bones short and full of quality. Both knees and hocks should present a good bearing surface the hock should be wide from front to rear and free from any puff or enlargements. The fore arm and second thigh should have length and be well muscled. The gait should be straight away showing no straddling nor interfering. We want a brisk walking pace with true action.

I consider, he said, that the breeding of draught horses is a better business for the average farmer than raising light horses, because the brood mares and colts are better adapted to farm work, there is little trouble about training and fitting them and there is always a good demand.

A mixture of Clyde and Shire blood makes the draught horse best suited to the market. The Clyde should give quality of bone, spring of pastern and action while the Shire should increase the weight and strength. If the pedigrees of the best stallions of today are studied back for 50 years it will generally be found that they contain a mixture of the two breeds. Originally the two breeds were probably one and they both had a common origin in the old English War Horse that was noted for his strength in the times of Julius Caesar. Of late years the Shire has been bred more in the flat country and for the moving of very heavy loads on a straight away pull where strength and massiveness is the main requisite. The Clyde on the other hand has been bred in a more hilly country and has more quality of bone and muscle and more activity.

Question—What about the Percheron? Mr. Spark—We have never found the Percheron satisfactory in England in comparison with the Shire and Clyde. He will not stand up under hard work as well and is not bred to a definite type.

The demand for draught horses in Britain this year has been such that no foals have sold for less than 20 guineas each and horses have sold up to 120 guineas.

Draught mares are the better for being worked up to the time of foaling but should not be put between shafts. After the foal is dropped, however, they should be laid off for 2 months. In case they are worked the foal should never be allowed to follow the mare, and great care should be taken that it is not allowed to suckle while the mare is hot. When she is brought in some milk should be drawn off as it is in a fevered condition and is likely to derange the foal's bowels.

The foal's feet should be watched and kept trimmed to the proper shape and his legs handled so that he will always be gentle. Never work a colt hard; he may be gradually started at 2 years old and is the better of steady work under a judicious driver. Remember that his muscles and tendons are forming and growing and may be seriously injured by overstraining.

Any horse that is stabled and fed needs regular and thorough grooming otherwise the pores of his skin will become clogged and he cannot be in perfect health. While it is desirable to clip horses for fast work it is not necessary for the heavy horse, good care will prevent his coat from becoming unduly long.

When a horse comes in warm from work he should never be washed nor wet in any way above the knees. Coming in wet from a rain or perspiration he should be thoroughly dried, otherwise rheumatism and other ills are likely to occur. The feet and legs below the knees if dirty should be washed out clean and the legs rubbed dry.

During his talk of which the above is but a very brief synopsis Mr. Spark illustrated desirable and undesirable types of horses, good and bad conformations, evidences of unsoundness and a large number of noted Shire Clyde Stallions and mares with life size lantern slide views. This made his demonstration quite as practical as if he had the horses upon the platform. His talks will long be remembered with pleasure by his audiences and we are glad to know that he will speak before the annual meeting of the Farmers' and Dairymen's Association at Fredericton on the 20th January next.

Consumption

Salt pork is a famous old-fashioned remedy for consumption. "Eat plenty of pork," was the advice to the consumptive 50 and 100 years ago.

Salt pork is good if a man can stomach it. The idea behind it is that fat is the food the consumptive needs most.

Scott's Emulsion is the modern method of feeding fat to the consumptive. Pork is too rough for sensitive stomachs. Scott's Emulsion is the most refined of fats, especially prepared for easy digestion.

Feeding him fat in this way, which is often the only way, is half the battle, but Scott's Emulsion does more than that. There is something about the combination of cod liver oil and hypophosphites in Scott's Emulsion that puts new life into the weak parts and has a special action on the diseased lungs.

A sample will be sent free upon request.

Be sure that this picture in the wrapper of every bottle of Emulsion you buy.
