The Russians Defeated at the Yalu River.

The Japanese have won a great land victory near the Yalu river. The Russian losses are estimated as high as 4000.

KUROPATKIN ADMITS HEAVY LOSSES. St. Petersburg, May 3.—Under today's date, General Kuropatkin telegraphs as follows:—

"Owing to the interruption of telegraphic communication, I have received no report from General Zassalitch.

"According to the testimony of persons arriving here during the night from Feng Wang Cheng, the Japanese on May 1st were operating from the front with an overwhelming force of artillery and attacked our left flank in superior force, enveloping it. A hot fire occurred at this point. The 22nd and 12th regiments of sharpshooters were engaged, defended themselves vigorously, and on several occasions taking the offensive, inflicting considerable losses on the Japanese. Our small force could not hold this position and retired, leaving several guns in the hands of the enemy. Owing to our heavy losses in men and horses, we could not succeed in carrying off our guns, but their breech-blocks were removed. Our force fell back on Feng Wang Cheng.

"General Zassalitch's force consisted of five regiments and five batteries, but according to the information at hand one regiment and two batteries stationed at Shakheze were not engaged, the Japanese not attacking that point.

"Our losses are not yet known, but in view of the stubbornness of the conflict they must have been very considerable."

CEAR DUMBFOUNDED OVER YALU DEFEAT.

St. Petersburg, May 3.—The emperor is understood to be greatly grieved over the losses sustained on the Yalu. Those who have seen his majesty say that he was dumbfounded when he was informed of the heavy fighting which attended the passage of the river. As is well understood here, General Kuropatkin's plans did not contemplate such resistance to the Japanese advance. It is said, moreover, that Kuropatkin himself was equally surprised and so chagrined over the miscarriage of his plans that he sent his first telegram to the general staff and not direct to the emperor.

The understanding here is that General Zassalitch had specific orders to avoid anything like a general engagement and it is believed that the Russian commander at the front probably was deceived in his estimate of the strength of General Kuropatkin's artillery, being in entire ignorance that 4.2 guns had been posted, and got into a position from
