Mr Edgar Mair who has recently returned from a successful business trip to Newfoundland, talks in an entertaining way of the "Ancient Colony" and the extent of business done on the island. To many who think of Newfoundland as simply a fishing centre, it will be a matter of news to them to be told that in St John's there are at least five stores larger than that of M R & A, in St John and evidently doing a larger business. The people are marked with the strongest kind of loyalty. England is the Homeland. To the schools of England are sent their children. From England comes the largest portion of their imports. In the large centres little sympathy is expressed with the idea of confederation with Canada. But says Mr Mair, in the outposts of Newfoundland confederation would be hailed as unimpaired blessing. Though somewhat antagonistic to doing business with Canadian firms Mr Mair was successful in opening up trade for the successful firm of which he is the leading member.
