

The right volume of sound for your home

Many sound-reproducing machines are sold altogether on the argument that they are loud. The volume of sound produced by an while perfect in its reproduction and musical in its tone, is not loud, strident, noisy or ear-piercing.

Edison Phonograph

It is easy to make a loud Phonograph. It is an art to make a Phonograph which gives proper value to each kind of music and all within the compass of the ordinary parlor or sitting room. When you buy an Edison Phonograph you will appreciate what it is to have an instrument that reproduces sound properly of the right volume for your home.

There are Edison dealers everywhere. Go to the nearest and buy the Edison Phonograph play both Edison Standard and Edison Amberol Records. Get complete catalogs from your dealer or from us.

FOR SALE OR EXCHANGE.

I will sell the THOROUGHbred BROOD MARE "THE CHARMER," IMPORTED BY THE GOVERNMENT, or will exchange her for a good driving horse. This is a GRAND GOOD BROOD MARE, PERFECTLY SMOOTH AND SOUND, quiet in every way and is a GOOD PROSPECT for anybody wishing to raise colts. My only reason for parting with her is that I do not want to raise any more colts as I have two already.

The Woman In the Alcove

By ANNA KATHARINE GREEN.

Author of "The Millionaire Baby," "The Village Bell," "The House in the Mist," "The Amethyst Box," Etc.

COPYRIGHT, 1908, THE BOBB'S-MERRILL COMPANY.

The pistol swerved my way. The face above it smiled. I watched that smile. Before it broadened to its full extent, I pressed the button.

Mr. Grey stood directly in the line of fire.

Fairbrother stared, dropped his pistol and burst forth with these two words:

"Brave girl!"

"The tone I can never convey. Then he made for the door."

As he laid his hand on the knob, he called back:

"I have been in worse straits than this!"

But he never had. When he opened the door, he found himself face to face with the inspector.

CHAPTER XXIII.

LATER, it was all explained. Mr. Grey, looking like another man, came into the room where he was endeavoring to soothe his stricken daughter and devour in secret my own joy. Taking the sweet girl in his arms he said, with a calm ignoring of my presence, at which I secretly smiled:

"This is the happiest moment of my existence, Helen. I feel as if I had recovered you from the brink of the grave."

"Me? Why, I have never been so ill as that."

"I know, but I have felt as if you were doomed ever since I heard or thought I heard in this city, and under no ordinary circumstances, the peculiar cry which haunts our house on the eve of any great misfortune. I shall not apologize for my fears. You know that I have good cause for them, but today, only today, I have heard from the lips of the most ardent knave I have ever known that she is sprung from himself with intent to deceive me. He knew my weakness, knew the cry. He knew in Darlington Manor when Cecilia died and, wishing to startle me into dropping something which I held, made use of his ventriloquial powers, he had been a mountebank once, poor wretch! and with such effect that I have not been a happy man since in spite of your daily improvement and continued promise of recovery. But I am happy now, relieved and joyful, and this miserable being—would you like to hear his story? Are you strong enough for anything so tragic? He is a thief and a murderer, but he has feelings, and his life has been a curious one and strangely interwoven with ours. Do you care to hear about it? He is the man who stole our diamond!"

My patient uttered a little cry.

"Oh, tell me," she entreated, excited, but not unhesitatingly, while I was in an anguish of curiosity I could with difficulty conceal.

Mr. Grey turned with courtesy to me and asked if a few family details would bore me. I smiled and assured him to the contrary, at which he settled himself in the chair he liked best and began a tale which I will permit myself to present to you complete and from other points of view than his own.

Some five years before one of the great diamonds of the world was offered for sale in an eastern market. Mr. Grey, who stopped at no expense in the gratification of his taste in this direction, immediately sent his agent to Egypt to examine the stone. If the agent discovered it to be all that was claimed for it and within the reach of a wealthy commoner's purse, he was to buy it. Upon inspection it was found to be all that was claimed, with one exception. In the center of one of the facets was a flaw, but as this was considered to mark the diamond and rather add to than detract from its value as a traditional stone with many historical associations it was finally purchased by Mr. Grey and placed among his treasures in his manor house in Kent. Never a suspicious man, he took delight in exhibiting this acquisition to such of his friends and acquaintances as were likely to feel any interest in it, and it was not an uncommon thing for him to allow it to pass from hand to hand while he portended over his other treasures and displayed this and that to such as had no eyes for the diamond.

It was after one such occasion that he found on taking the stone in his hand to replace it in the safe he had had built for it in one of his cabinets that it did not strike his eye with its usual force and brilliancy, and on examining it closely he discovered the absence of the telltale flaw. Struck with dismay, he submitted it to a still more rigid inspection, when he found that what he held was not even a diamond, but a worthless bit of glass, which had been substituted by some cunning knave for his invaluable gem.

For the moment his humiliation almost equaled his sense of loss. He had been so often warned of the danger he ran in letting so priceless an object pass around under all eyes but his own. His wife and friends had prophesied some such loss as this not once, but many times, and he had always laughed at their fears, saying that he knew his friends and there was not a scamp among them. But now he saw it proved that even the intuition of a man well versed in human nature is not always infallible, and, ashamed of his past laxness and more ashamed yet of the doubts which this experience called up in regard to all his friends, he shut up the false stone with his usual care and buried his loss in his own bosom till he could sift his impressions and recall with some degree of probability the circumstances under which this exchange could have been made.

It had not been made that evening. Of this he was positive. The only person present on this occasion was his friend of such standing and repute that suspicion in their regard was simply monstrous. When and to whom, then, had he shown the diamond last?

Alas, it had been a long month since he had shown the jewel. Cecilia, his youngest daughter, had died in the interim; therefore his mind had not been on jewels. A month—time for his precious diamond to have been carried back to the east! Time for it to have been recut! Surely it was lost to him forever, unless he could immediately locate the person who had robbed him of it.

But this promised difficulties. He could not remember just what persons he had entertained on that special day in his little hall of cabinets, and, when he did succeed in getting a list of them from his butler, it was by no means sure that it included the full number of his guests. His own memory was execrable, and, in short, he had but few facts to offer to the discreet agent sent up from Scotland Yard one morning to hear his complaint and act secretly in his interests. He could give him carte blanche to carry on his inquiries in the diamond market, but little he could do to satisfy the agent, it did not lead to any gratifying result to himself, and he had thoroughly made up his mind to swallow his loss and say nothing about it, when one day a young cousin of his living in great style in an adjoining county informed him that in some mysterious way he had lost from his collection of arms a unique and highly prized stiletto of Italian workmanship.

Scattered by this coincidence, Mr. Grey ventured upon a question or two which led to his cousin's confiding to him the fact that this article had disappeared after a large supper given by him to a number of friends and gentlemen from London. This piece of knowledge, still further coinciding with his own experience, caused Mr. Grey to feel that a list of his guests in the hope of finding among them one who had been in his own house.

His cousin, quite unconscious of the motives underlying this request, hastened to write out this list, and together they pored over the names, crossing out such as were absolutely out of suspicion. When they had reached the end of the list, but two names remained uncrossed. One was that of a rather pithy youth who had come in the wake of a highly reputed connection of theirs and the other that of an American tourist who gave all the evidences of great wealth and had presented letters to leading men in London which had insured him attentions not usually accorded to foreigners. This man's name was Fairbrother, and the moment Mr. Grey heard it he recalled the fact that an American with a peculiar name, but with a reputation for wealth, had been among his guests on the suspected evening.

Hiding the effect produced upon him by this discovery, he placed his finger on this name and begged his cousin to look up its owner's antecedents and present reputation in America; but, not content with this, he sent his own agent over to New York, whither as he soon learned, this gentleman had returned. The result was an apparent vindication of the suspected American. He was found to be a well known citizen of the great metropolis, moving in the highest circles and with a reputation for wealth won by an extraordinary business instinct.

To be sure, he had not been in Canada for some time, but he was

The Canadian authorities propose to make a protest to the Washington government against the new American marine policy of requiring masters, mates and marine engineers holding American certificates to reside in that country. Naturalization has always been necessary, but recently residence has been demanded as a condition of securing a license. A large number of holders of American licenses living in Canada will be seriously affected and the government will doubtless take action in their behalf.

DISTRESSING HEADACHES.

Headaches are largely the result of disordered kidneys.

Mrs. Hall, 84 Flora Street, St. Thomas, Ont., says:—"I suffered for years with headaches of a most distressing nature. They would come on me suddenly, and would last for days at a time. These were usually accompanied by spells of dizziness that would leave me unable to attend to my household duties. My back was weak and caused me much suffering through the night. I had doctored for years, but all to no avail. Nothing benefited me.

and my condition was gradually becoming worse. I learned of Booth's Kidney Pills. One box gave me a complete and lasting cure. I have not had a headache or dizzy spell since and I feel like a new person.

FAULTLESS IN PREPARATION. Unlike any other stomach regulator Parmelee's Vegetable Pills are the result of long study of vegetable compounds calculated to stimulate the stomach functions and maintain them at the normal condition. Years of use have proved their faultless character and established their excellent reputation. And this reputation they have maintained for years and will continue to maintain, for these pills must always stand at the head of the list of standard preparations.
