

THE YOUNGER SET

Ruthven, recovering from the shock of Selwyn's voice, started to pass him without a word.

"I said that I wanted to speak to you!" repeated Selwyn.

Ruthven, deigning no reply, attempted to shove by him, and Selwyn, placing one hand flat against the other's shoulder, pushed him violently back into the card room he had just left and, stepping in behind him, closed and locked the door.

"What the devil do you mean?" gasped Ruthven, his hard, minutely shaven face turning a deep red.

"What I say," replied Selwyn—"that I want a word or two with you."

He stood still for a moment in the center of the little room, tall, gaunt of feature and very pale.

"Ruthven," he said, "a few years ago you persuaded my wife to leave me, and I have never punished you. There were two reasons why I did not. The first was because I did not wish to punish her, and any blow at you would have reached her heavily. The second reason, subordinate to the first, is obvious—went men in these days have tacitly agreed to suspend a violent appeal to the unwritten law as a concession to civilization. This second reason, however, depends entirely upon the first as you see.

"By God!" began Ruthven, stepping back, one hand reaching for the door-knob, but Selwyn's voice rang out clear and sharp:

"Sit down!" And, as Ruthven glared at him out of his little eyes, "You'd better sit down, I think," said Selwyn softly.

Ruthven turned, took two unsteady steps forward and laid his heavily ringed hand on the back of a chair. Selwyn smiled, and Ruthven sat down.

"Now," continued Selwyn, "for certain rules of conduct to govern you during the remainder of your wife's lifetime. And your wife is ill, Mr. Ruthven—sick of a sickness which may last for a great many years or may be terminated in as many days. You know it?"

Ruthven snarled. "Yes, of course you knew it, or you suspected it. Your wife is in a sanitarium, as you have discovered. She is mentally ill—rational at times, violent at moments and for long periods quite docile, gentle, harmless, content to be talked to, read to, advised, persuaded. But during the last week a change of a certain nature has occurred which, which, I am told by competent physicians, not only renders her case beyond all hope of ultimate recovery, but threatens an earlier termination than was at first looked for. It is this: Your wife has become like a child again, occupied contentedly and quite happily with childish things. She has forgotten much. Her memory is quite gone. How much she does remember it is impossible to say."

His head fell. His brooding eyes were fixed on the rug at his feet. After awhile he looked up.

"I understand that you are contemplating proceedings against your wife. Are you?"

"Yes, I am," said Ruthven. "On the grounds of her mental incapacity?"

"Then, as I understand it, the woman whom you persuaded to break every law, human and divine, for your sake you now propose to abandon. Is that it?"

Ruthven made no reply. "You propose to publish her pitiable plight to the world by beginning proceedings. You intend to notify the public of your wife's infirmity by divorcing her."

"Sane or insane," burst out Ruthven, "she was riding for a fall, and she's going to get it! What the devil are you talking about? I'm not accountable to you. I'll do what I please. I'll manage my own affairs."

"No," said Selwyn; "I'll manage this particular affair. And now I'll tell you how I'm going to do it. I have in my lodgings, or, rather, in the small hall bedroom which I now occupy, an army service revolver in fairly good condition. I shall give myself the pleasure of using it on you if you ever commence any such action for divorce or separation against your wife."
