

HEALTHIEST ONE IN THE FAMILY

No Sign Of Dropsy And Kidney Trouble
Since Taking "FRUIT-A-TIVES"

HATTIE WARREN

Port Robinson, Ont., July 8th, 1915.
"We have used 'Fruit-a-tives' in our house for over three years and have always found them a good medicine. Our little girl, Hattie, was troubled with Kidney Disease. The Doctor said she was threatened with Dropsy. Her limbs and body were all swollen and we began to think she could not live. Finally, we decided to try 'Fruit-a-tives'. She began to show improvement after we had given her a few tablets. In a short time, the swelling had all gone down and her flesh began to look more natural. Now she is the healthiest one in the family and has no signs of the old ailment. We can not say too much for 'Fruit-a-tives' and would never be without them."

Soldiers Given Ross Rifles

this terrible war, could ignore a man of Laurier's leadership, of Laurier's judgment and ability, is something we cannot understand. But Sir Wilfrid Laurier and his friends were not only not consulted, they were spurned to their faces, and even when we attempted to discuss public matters in an honest way we were at once branded as traitors and rebels, who did not want the Allies to win the war. For the first eight or ten months, as our advice was not appreciated, we did not offer it, and it was not until late in the session of 1915 that we decided that it was our duty to tell the people of Canada, as nearly as we could, what was taking place.

STORIES OF GRAFT

BEGAN VERY EARLY

"Very early in the session of 1915," continued Mr. Carvell, "stories began to reach our ears of graft and incompetence in practically every department of government which had anything to do with the war."

Mr. Carvell explained how the Liberals asked for the submission to the Public Accounts Committee of all the matters that had been referred to in a certain report made by the Auditor-General, and how the Government kept delaying the matter, until within ten days of the end of the session, when they thought there would not be sufficient time to find out much information. Then they acceded to the request. But in that short ten days the Liberals found out that hundreds of thousands of pair of rotten boots had been obtained with the knowledge of the Government for the soldiers, who were giving up their lives to fight our battles.

"An action which is criminal to say the least, because I took the stand that any man who furnishes boots, binoculars, horses, or anything else for the war which is not the highest standard that can be provided is not only a traitor to his country, but is a criminal, and should be prosecuted for it." (Cheers). It is not a question of dollars and cents. In the ordinary affairs of any country in peace times, the purchasing of the supplies is largely a question of dollars and cents, and if the Government buys something that is of no value the country is the loser to that extent, and it is not the crime that it is when worse than useless articles are supplied to an army that is going out to meet an enemy taking its life with it in its hands.

"We found that in every possible branch of the Militia Department, no man can sell anything to this Government unless he sells it through a middleman, generally a Conservative member or a friend of a Conservative member. The only thing we found which did not come under that category was the spades of Sir Sam Hughes' stenographer. That was a real first-hand transaction. All the others went through some Conservative politician. But of all the contemptible things which have been proved, there is nothing as reprehensible as the 30,000 spade transaction represented by Sam Hughes' stenographer."

Mr. Carvell then told the story of the spade transaction.

"Away back in 1902 or 1903," he said, "a kindly disposed patriotic gentleman named Colonel Stoneman living in Hamilton, conceived the idea that a spade could be added to the soldier's equipment with spike in it which could be driven in the ground, and when advancing from one position to another it would be of some protection to the soldier, who could lie down behind it to fire. He had blue prints and very perfect drawings of his idea made out and filed with the Department of Militia and Defence. He had acknowledgments from the President of France, from Lord Roberts and Earl Kitchener, and others. Col. Stoneman did not try to patent his idea. He said that if the thing was an addition to the science of war—he was a military expert and enthusiast—he wanted the world to have it. One week after the war broke out Miss Ena McCallum, private secretary to the Minister of Militia, applied to the Patent Department of Canada and asked to have a patent granted to her upon this very invention of Colonel Stoneman's. The Minister himself was the first man to apply for the patent, but the solicitors, through whom he applied, told him it would never do for the Minister to do so, he said, 'Give it to Ena. She will put it through.' (Laughter.) Without a moment's hesitation Ena swore that she was the inventor of a new and useful patent with a hole in it. (Laughter.) The Minister himself then went to the patent branch of the Agricultural Department and asked them to lay aside all their business and put this thing through and they did. The patent went through within a week. Then some one went to the Midvale Steel Manufacturing Co. in the United States and bought 35,000 of these articles at $1.35 each. Competent men have told me that it could not possibly have cost more than 50 cents each, even allowing for the increased price of steel. They paid 15 cents per handle, and they were sent to England to rust around the camps. Not one solitary spade has been used by a soldier. (Shame.)

Mr. Carvell added: "When you see the private secretary of the Minister of Militia becoming a party to rob this country of that amount of money, what would they do if they thought we would not find them out. GARLAND AND FOSTER

STORIES TOLD AGAIN

Mr. Carvell then reiterated the part played by Mr. Garland, a Conservative member, and another Conservative member, Mr. Foster, how as a result of being found out, they had both been driven from public life. His story of the purchasing of old horses, with all the diseases that flesh is heir to, at cheap rate in order that a big rake off could be made when they were sold to the Government, was an amusing, but sorry transaction to listen to. One horse bought was so old, that according to the sworn testimony it was offered to the Government at the time of the South African war, and 'turne down. This time it was bought.

The binocular transaction came up next for review, and passing on to the scandal of the Ross rifle Mr. Carvell said he was not going to disguise the fact the Manufacture of the Ross rifle was established during the days of the Liberal regime by Sir Frederick Borden. "But we did not advocate the Ross rifle; we advocated the policy of making rifles in Canada. We loved them and now that rifles can be made in Canada. The Canadian soldiers had not been in the trenches two months before we found that these rifles were not what was wanted. The rifle, instead of being an instrument in the hands of the soldier, by which he could protect himself and defeat the enemy, was really an instrument of absolute murder to the soldier himself.

SAYS GOVERNMENT KNEW ROSS RIFLE CONDEMNED

"Now I will make a statement which has not been made before. The report of General Alderson condemning the Ross rifle, which was published in the Ottawa Citizen in the month of May, 1916, and upon which publication the Government were compelled to abandon the Ross rifle, was in the hands of the Government five months before it was made public, and I had a copy of it four months before it was made public. And with this knowledge they still allowed them to go on manufacturing this rifle; they still put them in the hands of Canadian soldiers, and thousands of them lost their lives on account of the incompetence of this rifle, and they had the report in their hands five months before they discarded it, and during those five months they were branding as traitors every Liberal member of Parliament who tried to bring this matter to the light of day, and let the public know what was exactly going on. Fortunately the Ottawa Citizen was able to get a copy of this report. It was published in the latter part of the month of May, and in two or three weeks afterwards the Ross rifle was abandoned, and now they are using the Lee-Enfield rifle instead of the Ross rifle."

"Perhaps the most serious charge that can be laid at the door of this Government," Mr. Carvell continued, "outside of their general incompetence of the affairs of the country, is the manner in which they have handled some $300,000,000 or $400,000,000 of the Mother Country in the purchase of munitions of war. I don't want to make any statement which might sound exaggerated, but I know that the money that has been squandered runs into tens of millions."

Mr. Carvell went over the ground of munition supply purchase from the time the Canadian Government were appointed the accredited representatives of the British Government, outlining the visit to this country subsequently of Mr. Thomas the representative of Lloyd George, who dismissed the old Shell Committee. He gave instances how the real manufacturers of Canada had been overlooked in the placing of orders which went to mushroom companies, and how sometimes twice and three times the amount of money had been paid for munitions. Passing reference was made to the Kite charges and after dwelling on several features of the sworn testimony Mr. Carvell added: "And yet they told you that we didn't prove anything and that Mr. Carvell and Mr. Kite should be driven from Parliament. They said that we didn't prove that Sam Hughes got any of the money. We never charged that Sam Hughes had any of the money but we proved that $125,000 of that so close to Sam Hughes that there must be a few people of this country who have not any suspicion as to the destination of that money. (A voice: "Ask Mabel," and laughter.)

Mr. Carvell went over the face scandal, explaining the rakes off that had been made by Allison and others, but he said the real inquiry had been in the fact that Canadian manufacturers who wanted to manufacture those fuses had not been given an opportunity of tendering on them. New plants had been built in the United States to carry out these contracts, and could not these plants equally have been established in Canada?

"These men call themselves patriotic men, men who want to build up Canadian industries," Mr. Carvell went on, "but I swear that they have driven away from Canada more than they have ever brought into it."

"MONOMANIAC PRESIDES OVER MILITIA DEPARTMENT"

"These are some of the outstanding reasons why we are opposing the Government. There are, of course, other reasons. I don't want to be hard, but in my judgment one of the greatest misfortunes which any country has ever sustained is the fact that when war broke out the Militia Department here was presided over by a monomaniac and the mono stands for the glorification of one man, Sam Hughes. Think of the thousands and tens of thousands of dollars that have been spent in advertising this man as a military genius. He has travelled across the Atlantic over again, and across Canada in special trains with a retinue of officers, both male and female—(laughter)—and the Government must take their full share of the responsibility."

Mr. Carvell showed how recruiting had lessened, due very largely to the fact that too many recruiting officers' jobs had been found for Conservative friends who needed the $5 a day. Of course, he expected many recruiting officers, who were rendering valuable service to the nation. He thought that Canada's 375,000 men had been raised in spite of the mismanagement of the Government, and the credit was due to the energy and ambition of commanding officers, to local organizations and so on.

The Government has been absolutely without policy and without ideas regarding recruiting. There was not one English speaking Cabinet Minister outside of Quebec, who had gone through the country addressing recruiting meetings, and now that the Government were at the end, they turned around to the old Liberal Chief, whose assistance before they had spurned, and asked him to give them a lift.

A voice—"He did it without being asked."

Mr. Carvell—"Yes, but he didn't do it their own way."

Mr. Carvell said he had some admiration for Mr. R. B. Bennett, M.P., who had succeeded Sir Thomas Tait as head of the National Service movement, but Mr. Bennett was a hidebound politician who would play the political game. The Conservatives wanted Sir Wilfrid Laurier to go on that committee under Mr. R. B. Bennett, but though Sir Wilfrid may look innocent, he was not big enough foot to be caught by that sort of bait.

In conclusion, Mr. Carvell said that after the war Canada would be face to face with some huge problems and bigger men than we have in office today would be needed to solve them. He said: "Possibly I am a bigger admirer of the Liberal Chief than I ought to be—('No, No')—I have followed him since I was a boy. I can hardly remember when I was not shouting for Laurier. I followed him for eight years while in office, and five years in Opposition. I admire the man's ability and judgment, but above all I admire the man's honesty. (Cheers.) I admire his honesty of purpose, his absolute sense of equity and justice when dealing with different races and creeds. And there can be no question in the world that if the Lord spares this man's life—as I believe He will—he is the one man in the Empire today who will be called upon to take hold of the mix-up in Canada and bring order out of chaos." (Loud and continued applause.)

Mr. Lafontaine, vice-president of the Young Liberal Association, proposed the toast of "Our Cause."

ADDRESS
To W. B. Jewett, Esq., Optician.

Jeweler, Issuer of Marriage License, Election Agent, Past Regent R. Arcanum, Watchmaker and Engraver.

Dear Sir,—On this your Natal Day, we the undersigned would desire to add our felicitations to the general rejoicing. That you have been permitted by a kind Providence to reach another milestone on the journey of life, is a pleasure to us. That your life has been a very useful one is known to us all. In many homes your praises are being sung.

We are mindful of your bright sunny manner, your rendering of song, anecdote and story, will long live in our memories. We feel that as the years come and go your best efforts are put forth for the betterment of the world. We are more forcibly reminded of this when we remember that quite recently without hope of gain you at considerable expense fitted yourself the better to provide eyes to the blind. What a noble example! How often your name is and will be heard in the hamlets and villages of our land. What prayers are being offered in your behalf. We ask you to accept the accompanying gift as a small token of our esteem for you and your yours. May it be the means of seeing more fields if possible for the scope of your benevolence. That time may lay its hand gently upon you and yours. That every good gift may fall to you. That health and all it brings be vouchsafed unto you. That many more birthdays with the joy of an unbroken family may be yours to enjoy, and that the angel of death may be long delayed in the journey to your house, and the bliss of Heaven be yours throughout eternity is the wish of us all.

LOOK!

If you were told of a new discovery for the treatment of coughs, colds and bronchitis, as certain in its action on all chest troubles as anti-toxin is on diphtheria, or vaccination on small-pox, wouldn't you feel like giving it a trial?

Peps is the discovery! Peps are little tablets, containing certain medicinal ingredients, which, when placed upon the tongue, immediately turn into vapor, and are at once breathed down the air passages to the lungs. On their journey, they soothe the inflamed and irritated membranes of the bronchial tubes, the delicate walls of the air passages, and finally enter and carry relief and healing to the lungs. In a word, while no liquid or solid can get to the lungs and air passages, these Peps fumes get there direct, and at once commence their work of healing.

FREE TRIAL Cut out this article, write across it the name and date of this paper, and mail it (with 1c. stamp to pay return postage) to Peps Co., Toronto. A free trial packet will then be sent you. All druggists and stores sell Peps, 50c. box.
