The Chatham World says: "The Gleaner serves notice on the local government that it must re-organize or prepare for death. It does not mean the ministers who should be kicked out or the men who should be taken in. The Gleaner talks as though the government depends on its support for its life. The general impression is that it depends on the government for existence."

OBITUARY

Mrs. Jerusha A. Page, wife of Andrew J. Page, residing at Centreville, N. B., died at her home on May 10th, after seven weeks' illness. She was the mother of eight children seven of whom are living, Mrs. C. J. Estabrook, Mrs. J. M. Balmain and Mrs. R. J. Tracy of Denver, Smith S. Page, James Page, Mrs. F. H. Corbett and Mrs. John J. Lipsett of Centreville. To these she had given a mother's fondest love and care, both by example and instruction she had impressed upon them the beauty and blessedness of the Christian life. As a wife she was a loving and faithful helpmeet, and as a neighbor her life was fragrant with helpful service.

In her illness she had a premonition that she would not get well. She was during her sickness much in conversation with her loved ones, and urged them to love each other as she had taught them all through her days of instruction to them. She frequently called for the reading of her favorite passages of scripture and was much in prayer. She rejoiced much in her dying hours but could not speak forth her feelings distinctly. Her conversation dwelt much upon loved ones gone before. While she is now wearing the crown prepared for her, many on earth will "rise up and call her blessed."

Rev. Marquis D. Hornbeck, Denver, Col.

JAMES M. LEWIS.

R. and had for some time been in charge of one of the Gibson Branch trains. His wife pre-deceased him several years. Two daughters, Mrs. Fred Cowan and Miss Isabelle Lewis, a school teacher, of Woodstock, and two sons, Harry with the Canadian Artillery at the front and Archie in Maine survive. The funeral took place at 2:30 on Friday afternoon, with interment in the Methodist cemetery. Rev. Frank Baird officiating. The pall bearers were: Messrs H. E. Currie, L. M. Dow, Fred Carson, Phil Saunders, Burt
