then they will forget that song, "This is not Canada's War." Let them look at the wooden crosses in France and the broken men that are returning and say "This is not Canada's War." This written in letters of blood on this side to the contrary. When I come out I'll write you all about the scrap, and if in the meantime I should be sent to Blighty and you don't get any mail from me for some time don't get uneasy, for rather you should hold a celebration because I am out of it. Tell mother what I have written, tell her I will always be proud of being the son of such a mother. And tell my father his last words "Do your best" are still ringing in my ears. Kiss the Kiddies for me, I'll do it myself some time.
Lovingly,
HARRY.

(Harry was buried twice at Loos but dug himself out. He was slightly gassed and out of the ranks for two weeks. As already told he met his death at Passchendaele.)
