CENTRAL BIRCH BORERS

Dominion and Provincial Governments are by private operators, to direct operations into the areas where salvage will be most effective in reducing the loss. All owners of birch, including woodlot owners, should watch for evidence of attack by the bronze birch borer. The Dominion Entomological Laboratory at Fredericton, N. B., will supply information regarding methods of determining the need for salvage.

So now I see they've rationed T, which seems a little queer, that they would ration tea and coffee and did not ration beer. It takes good grain to make it, which could be used 4 bread, while thousands now are starving who will very soon be dead. Y legalize temptation, Y dig the pit of sin, then blame the poor weak brother because he tumbles in. We know we need the money 2 carry on the war. Y not tether old man Hitler and cover him with tar, Y pay so much for fuel to keep the children warm, and think 2 c them shiver won't do them any harm. The Passing Years

"Grow old along with me,
The best is yet to be,
The last of life, for which
The first was made".

Twenty-five Years ago: From the Sentinel Files July 20th, 1917.

The following young ladies aided in the collecting: The Misses Isabel Chandler, Mildred Smith, Muriel Smith, Dorothy Dickinson, Ruth Dibble, Louise Smith, Mary Jarvis, Winnifred McCunn, Marjorie Rankin, Katherine Jarvis, Ruth McManus, Madeleine Griffin, Dorothy Smith, Marguerite McLaughlin, Lillian Jones and Edith Ellis.

Lt. Col. W. C. Good arrived in Woodstock on Wednesday for three months furlough. He was a member of the First Contingent having sailed on the first steamer which left Quebec. Col. Good is a veteran of the South African War and has the Queen's medal with two bars.

Mrs. S. Bishop, River de Chute, has received word that Gunner D. R. Bishop was admitted to hospital at Camriere, July 4th with a severe gunshot in his left leg.

The first tennis tea of the season was held on Saturday when the hostesses were: Mrs. H. W. Lowmyer, Mrs. C. J. Jones, the Misses Cassie Hay, Gertrude and Marie Thompson and Madeleine Griffin.

Miss Lucy Leighton and Miss Mary Leighton are visiting friends in Saint John this week.

Forty-Five Years Ago, From the Sentinel Files July 20th, 1897.

The Loyal Orange celebration was a pageant which, for volume and spectacular display has never before been equalled in Woodstock.

The finely mounted richly caparisoned Grand Marshall A. F. Lockhart on his aids, the handsomely uniformed Black Knights and 17 other degrees as well as 44 other lodges made a grand and imposing show. There were six bands, one each from Houlton, Saint John, Fredericton, St. Stephen, Hartland and Woodstock.

About 2000 people were present Monday at the Park and witnessed some speedy trotting. The officials were: Judges, J. E. Burnham, (starter), W. N. Hand, E. Chambers, J. McGivern, G. L. Holyoke; timers J. A. Parley, N. R. Colter; clerk, John P. Maloney.

In the bicycle races the novice race was won by Frank Sullivan. The officials in the races were: George Balmain, John Fripp, Dr. Sprague and S. Miller.

The inspection of the Woodstock Field Battery terminated in a very satisfactory way. Col. Montzambert the inspection officer was generous in his compliments to Col. Dibble and his battery. On Thursday the battery invited the public to witness an exhibition of sports. The exhibition opened with the firing of guns, then followed a musical ride, tilting tournaments, Hurdle Jumping, wrestling on horse back, scaling ladders, sinking pyramids, tumbling, acting on the horizontal bar tug of war between the right and left divisions of the battery, singing by the battery choir and singing with band accompaniment.

Wanted—In exchange for musical instruments a few good heavy horses. Prices so low for instruments will surprise you. Apply C. R. Watson.

THE RICHES OF THE CAUCASUS

That important area of Russia which lies between the Black Sea and the Caspian is now in the news, as it is soon likely to be the objective for a terrific struggle between the warring nations.

The area is known as the Caucasus because it is dominated by the great range of mountains bearing that name running for a length of 700 miles with a width of from fifty to 100. Mt. Elbruz at 18,465 feet is its highest point and the highest fountain in Europe, and for most of its length this range averages 10,000 feet, with but few passes.

The mountain barrier divides Russia Proper from the other Soviet Republics of Georgia and Azerbaijan, which have long been famous for the rich oil wells at Baku and the pipe-line and oilport at Batum on the Black Sea.

The 150,000 square miles of the area north of the Caucasus Mountains are not only famous for the newly-developed oil, but from time immemorial they have been a farming country, today growing bountiful crops of wheat.

At the north-eastern corner is Astrakhan, a city with over a quarter of a million inhabitants near the many mouths of the River Volga. The fur it manufactures from the skins of young sheep has made this city a household name, but it is a great centre of trade, and is of exceptional importance now that munitions from the British and American factories are being dispatched by way of Persia. For Persia forms the southern coast of the Caspian, and it is by Astrakhan and the mighty Volga that ships will carry these essential materials into the very heart of the country and behind the fighting line.

In the north-west of Persia is Tabriz, which is linked by railway with Erivan, the capital of Russian Armenia; and Tiflis, the capital of Georgia, and the biggest Russian city south of the Caucasus Mountains.

Georgia is rich in coal, and in manganese ore, the deposits of which are estimated at 250 million tons. To the east of Georgia lies Azerbaijan, with nearly a million people living at Baku, the biggest oil-producing centre in Russian territory.

THE AUTHOR OF "RAB"

Vincent Edwards

Just sixty years ago, there died in Edinburgh, Scotland, the man who gave literature one of its finest stories about dogs. His name—you've probably guessed it—was Dr. John Brown. His celebrated tale was "Rab and His Friends."

At the time of his death Dr. Brown was probably the "first citizen" of the Scottish capital. Seldom had a man been more honored and beloved, and it was said that people took pleasure just in seeing this kindly old physician of the benign face and silver hair walking along Princes Street on sunny days.

Dr. Brown loved Edinburgh and appeared to know everybody. But his acquaintance extended farther than that of most people. He knew, not only all sorts and conditions of men, but most of the horses and dogs. It was told on good authority that he respected and sympathized with dog nature just as he did with human beings.

One day, as Dr. Brown was driving along in his carriage, his terrier leaped from the opposite seat straight through the open window. The doctor wasn't the least put out. "I expect he recognized an old acquaintance," he said. Another time he remarked, I have just met a deeply conscientious dog. He was carrying his own muzzle."

It was while Dr. Brown was studying medicine as a young man that the dog "Rab" wandered into the Minto Hospital. It gave the student the material for the story that was to make him more famous than his practice. The tale was written "on the quick," as he put it. Some years afterwards, his uncle, a minister, asked him to give a talk in his native town. The nephew wanted to tell these simple, kindly Scotch folk a story they would remember. So that was how he came to sit down and put on paper the moving account of Rab and his friends.

Allie and Rab. He began at midnight and by four in the morning the story was finished. But not even Dr. Brown ever dreamed that the story would one day be read and loved all over the world.

Although the velvet vault of night shuts down when day is June I never doubt tomorrow's dawn will bring its risen sun; Although the winter's leafless trees watch over fields of snow, I never doubt there'll come the spring when grass and buds will grow. Although the kernels that I plant are brown, dead-like and seed, I never doubt that they will yield as seeds of yesteryear; Although the secret of the tide is not for me to share, I never doubt its well-timed ebb will leave the wide sands bare; Although the miracle of life to me is unrevealed, I never doubt the living child nor fawn by doe concealed; And so, although I may not know what follows Death's release, Content, I trust the road ahead to Him—and am at peace.
