OLD DAYS RECALLED

An interesting visitor to the Carleton Sentinel Office last week was William Alton of Upper Jacksonville, who will be 94 years old in January. Mr. Alton retains all his faculties, except that his eyesight is not so good as in his younger days. He has been a life-long subscriber to the Sentinel. He recalled the days when this paper was referred to as the Carleton Bible. Those were the days when liquor sales were not restricted and every second store sold wine and spirits. The Sentinel in those days was controlled by the Watt family, who were great prohibitionists, the vigor with which they attacked the liquor traffic being responsible for the cognomen.
