Canada's Bright Future.

TORONTO, Nov. 19.—Lord Aberdeen in a speech at the National Club here on Saturday evening, turning from agriculture, alluded to the wider questions effecting the future of Canada. He declared his firm belief in the magnificent future that lay before the country. He was one of those, he said, who looked forward to a closer union of the English speaking world. The great colonies of Britain were yearly increasing in importance, and from being colonial dependencies were fast assuming the position of sister nations to the old world. It might not be in his time, but he hoped the day was not far distant when these young nations together with the great American republic would be knit together in closer brotherhood with the mother land. (Loud cheers.)

During his visit to the United States he had found on every side the greatest cordiality and friendship expressed for both Canada and England. With this spirit fostered and encouraged on both sides it was not difficult to conceive that ere many years had passed what now to some appeared a dream would become a reality. He believed that in Canada there existed to-day a strong and growing faith in the future of the country, a faith which would not be shaken by the discouragements and vicissitudes that all new countries had to face, but would grow and deepen, aiding in building up a country of which all Canadians might well be proud. (Loud cheers.)

Have You Tried.

Is the statement you have made me Justified, That you never will pursue it; For you know you cannot do it! Have you tried?

Have you put both nerve and sinew To the test? Have you set your wits to working—Have you, brother, (never shirking) Done your best?

Have you braved life's stormy river, Deep and wide? Have you wrestled with the billow? Have you pressed a sleepless pillow? Have you tried?

Did you rise up with the dawning Of the day? When the east was bright with beauty, Did you go forth to your duty, Brother, say?

If through deepest tribulations, And through pain— If in joy as well as sorrow, You have tried, why then, to-morrow, Try again.

Better be Happy than Rich.

Better be happy than rich, If riches bring sorrow and pain; Better to sew and to stitch, And enjoy the little you gain. Some people love to be thought The owner of thousands awhile, Aching what others have brought From the paths of honor and toil.

Better be happy than rich, If riches bring sorrow and pain; Better to sew and to stitch, And enjoy the little you gain. Honestly ever can say, "I blush to meet no man," and why? With conscience clear as the day, He lives with contentment and joy.

Better be happy than rich, If riches bring sorrow and pain; Better to sew and to stitch, And enjoy the little you gain. What is position, if you Wake up every morning and find Poverty grinning! How true That pride can overbalance the mind!

Better be happy than rich, If riches bring sorrow and pain; Better to sew and to stitch, And enjoy the little you gain. Noble men ever can see A something more worthy than gold; Goodness of heart unto me Has heavenly joys to unfold.

The Old Professor.

The extent to which theory often fails in practice is furnished by a venerated professor, a most distinguished mathematician, whose works are still used as text books in many of our institutions, and which occurred within the compass of our own experience.

He went to Bethel, Me., on his return he spent the Sabbath in Lewiston. Monday morning he was told the horse was sick. Nevertheless he started. The horse went a few rods, fell down and broke both thighs. He then sent his wife home, and also sent to Brunswick for another horse and carriage to take him and the broken chaise home.

When the driver came they lashed the two vehicles together and started. All went well till they came to the first long, steep hill between Lewiston and Brunswick; on its summit they held a consultation. The professor said: "Mr. Chandler, it is too much for the horse to hold these two carriages on this steep descent: take the horse out; I will get into the shafts."

"Professor," replied Chandler, "the breeching is strong."

"But the horse, Mr. Chandler; it is too much for the horse. Besides, I know how to take advantage of the descent, and can manage it much better than the horse."

"If the horse can't hold it, you can't."

"Do you, sir, intend to place me, in point of intelligence and knowledge of mechanical forces, below a horse? I have made mathematics the study of a lifetime."

"I have no intention to be disrespectful sir; but I know that a horse understands his own business, which is handling a load on a hill. I was sent up here by my employer to take care of his property, and if you prefer to be horse yourself I cannot be responsible."

"I," replied the professor, "will resume all responsibility."

The driver, nothing loath to witness the operation, took out the horse and held him by the bridle; and the professor, getting into the shafts, took hold of them at the ends. The forward carriage was just descending the hill and the hinder one a little over the summit, when the professor trod on a rolling stone, which caused him to plunge forward, and increased his velocity so much that he was forced to walk faster and exchange the slanting position with his shoulders thrown well back and his feet braced—which he had first adopted, for a perpendicular one. Soon he was pushed into a run, the carriages going at a fearful rate.

At the bottom of the hill was a brook; on each side precipitous banks. The professor was between Syella and Charybdis, going six feet at a leap. In order to cramp the forward wheel he turned suddenly to the right. The shafts of the forward carriage went two feet into the bank, breaking both of them short off; the lashing the hinder one slipped, and it ran into the forward one, breaking the fender, and both vehicles turned over at the bottom of the hill with a tremendous crash; the learned gentleman described a parabola—one of his favorite figures—and landed two rods away. He rose from the earth, his knees skinned, pants torn, a piece of skin knocked off his forehead, and his best hat flat as a pancake beneath the hind carriage; and, looking around, said—

"Is it possible I could have been so much deceived as to the momentum?"

"I don't know anything about momentum," said Chandler, "but I know something about horses. I know it makes a mighty difference on a steep hill whether the horse has two legs or four, and whether he weighs one hundred and seventy-five or one thousand two hundred pounds."

It cost the professor $37.50 to pay the damages.

Going Early.

Punctuality is perhaps a characteristic American trait. At all events American tourists abroad are given to bemoaning the dilatory ways of other peoples. How early this characteristic is sometimes developed—in connection, too, with the American habit of travelling—is pleasantly illustrated by a little story printed in Golden Days.

A small rosy-cheeked girl picked up her doll and her doll's trunk, and trudged a mile or more over frosty roads until she reached a railway station. There she boarded the first train that came along, and contentedly settled herself and her doll into a vacant seat.

By and by the conductor appeared. He looked down at the little woman, who was pointing out flying trees and other objects of interest to her travelling companion, the doll.

"Where are you going little one?" asked the big man with buttons.

"Why, I'm going to the World's Fair, of course."

The conductor coughed.

"Aren't you rather early?" he asked.

"I don't believe the doors are open yet."

"Dear me," said the child in alarm, "what shall I do?"

"Perhaps you had better go home and ask your mother," suggested the conductor.

And she did. She was loaded with pretty things by interested fellow passengers, and returned to her mother in safety. We may reasonably expect that she will be among the first visitors when the World's Fair opens its gates to the world.

Undress Parade.

Bravery and good tactics may be displayed in a retreat as well as in an advance. Indeed a true soldier never shows to so good advantage as when he suddenly finds himself taken at a disadvantage. An anecdote which illustrates this point is taken from Mr. Warren Lee Goss's "Recollections of a Private."

Just before the battle of Chantilly, I, with Wad Rider and "Joe," the recruit, had retired to the seclusion of a neighboring wood to engage in a war of extermination against a certain too close an invader of the Union blue.

I had partly resumed by clothing, but not my shoes. Joe had entirely re-dressed, but Wad Rider was still in undress parade.

Suddenly Joe, whose quickness of sight and hearing were remarkable, shouted, "Rebs! rebs!" Down a cross-road on our left came a squad of the enemy's cavalry. I ran barefoot, with my cartridge box and belt over one shoulder, my musket in one hand, and my other hand holding my garments together.

As I ran I heard a musket-shot, and turned to view the situation. Wad Rider, dressed in nothing but his cuticle and equipments, had shot the leading cavalryman in pursuit, and shouting like mad for reinforcements, was retreating in light marching order upon the camp.

I dashed through a stump lot, with Joe on my flank and Wad in the rear, still pursued by the enemy, who were calling on us to surrender. The uproar brought the boys swarming from the camp, and when I regained my feet, after collision with the root of a stump, the Confederates were making for the woods.

Under a strong escort of comrades we returned to reclaim Wad's uniform and my shoes, but the enemy had gobbled them. Wad concluded he must use the clothing of the unfortunate cavalryman he had shot, and looked grotesque enough in his grey suit.

"First thing you hear of," said he, "some fool will be shooting me for a reb."

What is a Flirt?

Somebody wrote to me and asked me to define a flirt. It seems unnecessary when the dictionary meaning is worded in such terse Saxon terms. There has been some degree of fascination tossed about the world by a perversion of its meaning, but it is quite time to apply it only in its true sense, and the appellation is far from being a complimentary one.

Do you want to act a lie? Then flirt.

Do you care to lose the modest charm of manner which is woman's best heritage and man's too infrequently fond attribute. Then play at love.

Do you want your future life embittered which will stab you when your heart is beating with happiness? Then cheat some one into giving you true regard of falseness.

If you would be womanly my woman reader, or manly, my unknown questioner, give your esteem to all who desire it, your friendship to those who are your true friends, and your heart's warm earnest love to one man or to one woman, and let it be unswayed by the flirtings which many count in triumph on the fingers of both their hands.
